STUDENT RESEARCHERS
Campus Research Day highlights graduate and undergraduate research

On April 14, 2015, Campus Research Day began with the Keynote Address given by Jack W. Plunkett, author of the Axiom Business Book Award winning title, The Next Boom.

The presentations and posters represented the scholarly works of 252 students, including 41 graduates and 211 undergraduates, from 12 academic departments.

Special thanks to Katie McGrath, Campus Research Day Chair, for organizing this important event for our student community.

ARTIST HONORED
Student honored with cover of university journal

The library is proud to congratulate Justin Oeftger, winner of the library’s contest to create a cover for the Journal of Interdisciplinary Graduate Research (JIGR).

In addition to his work gracing the cover of JIGR, a print of the piece is on permanent display on the main floor of the library.

Focus on Writing

In Assessing and Improving Student Writing in College, Walvoord (2014) noted some good reasons for a university to focus on student writing:
• Writing improves higher-order thinking skills.
• Writing enhances student learning.
• Writing is linked to academic success, which affects student retention.
• Writing well is one of the most important skills, according to employers.

The following articles address the subject of academic writing:
• “Students’ Perspectives on Academic Writing in the Digital Age” by Christine Sinclair.
• “Student Beliefs and Attitudes about Authorial Identity in Academic Writing” by Gail Pittman, et. al.
• “The ABCDE of Writing: Coaching High-Quality High-Quantity Writing” by Maria Gardiner and Hugh Kearns.
• “Teaching Scholarly Writing in an Online Nursing Program” by Pamela Stoeckel.
• “Writing as a Mode of Learning” by Janet Emig.
