FACULTY SERVICES ON LIBRARY’S WEBSITE

McKee Library’s website provides faculty access to services and tools

McKee Library’s website was updated to the university’s new design during the summer.

Faculty Services
To access the complete listing of faculty services available from McKee Library, select “Services” on the right-hand side of the library’s homepage, then select “Faculty Services”.

On the Faculty Services page, you can find direct access to Achieve, the database supported by Academic administration for storing and viewing Southern Adventist University faculty projects, publications, and presentations.

In addition, you can request new materials and resources, including book, media, journal requests, and database recommendations from the Faculty Services webpage.

Schedule an Instruction Session
To electronically schedule an information literacy session or Writing Center workshop, select “Library Calendar & Reservations” on the right-hand side of the library’s homepage. A link to request the session is available near the bottom of the page.

Research@Southern
To follow the current research activities occurring on campus, you are encouraged to view and “follow” Research@Southern, available under tools on the library’s homepage.

Questions about the Website?

FOCUS ON WRITING: WRITING TO LEARN

Information from Writing Across the Curriculum at Sacramento State on designing “Writing to Learn” assignments

“Writing to learn” assignments are informal writing activities, such as journals, microthemes, or quick writes. They can be ungraded or evaluated quickly and holistically (e.g., assigned a “check plus” or “check”). They help students understand and work through course content.

Types of Writing to Learn Assignments

• Quick writes. Quick writes include any brief in-class writing, and are usually not evaluated. Since writing is thinking, quick writes are a way to get students thinking about course content. Instructors can ask students to do a quick write about a reading or stop a lecture and ask students to do a quick write to formulate their thoughts on an issue or question.

• Journals and Reading Logs. Asking students to write informal, daily or weekly journals is an effective way to get them to engage critically in the reading, lectures, and other class content. In journals students can take risks, reflect on what they’ve learned, and relate course content to personal experience.

• Microthemes. Microthemes are “mini-essays” on a focused topic. In a microtheme, students might define a key term, summarize a research article, or respond to a debate.
