Southern College
REGISTRATION EXCEEDS EXPECTATIONS

By Norman Hobbs

Registration pleasantly surprised the Southern College faculty. Including 159 students of Colorado, 1,434 students were registered—only three shy of last year totals at the same point in the semester. Miss Elam, Director of Records, is well pleased with the incomplete figures. She noted that registration’s final numbers are quite surprising. Late registrants will be coming, and “the growth mold” for the future looks impressive. She also praised the recruitment program and is very excited: “Southern College is on the go with a renewed spirit of enthusiasm.” In response to what may have triggered the larger-than-expected turnout, Dr. Barrow, Director of Admissions, commented, “It’s the Gateway to Europe” was developed as a means of interest to bring and to retain students. More scholarships were offered: leadership, academic, national merit, ACT, and student missionary.” Dr. Barrow also praised his office personnel for their hard work in keeping up with the voluminous mail and in returning quick responses. He explained the recruitment program which encouraged enrollment as having two main thrusts: “We had recruiters in all five conferences of the Southern Union, and our tele-marketing program contacted students by phone. Yet the large enrolment had an unexpected effect on Talge Hall and Thatcher Hall. To save money, the summer, block walls had been constructed to divide the third floor into sections, thus closing parts of the dorm. Because enrollment supplied more Talge residents than expected, two of the walls needed to be taken down on the second day of registration. Dea Christman, Dean of Men, originally expected around 350 residents—right now there are just over 200.”

The Return of Frampton

By Brent Van Arsdale

Mac Frampton and his band will present a contemporary piano concert Saturday, September 8, 1984, at 8:45 p.m. in the P.E. Center. The concert is free for students, $1.50 for non-students. The concert offers a variety of music with Frampton’s repertoire ranging from classical to jazz. When asked to describe and define his style, Mac said, “I’m not sure that I’ve got it.” He is not jazz, and “it’s too classical, yet it has influences of all three. It has classical discipline, with the freedom of jazz.”

Described by reviewers as “one of the most exciting and talented young pianists on the American stage today,” Mac Frampton is an international concert artist who has appeared frequently on television and has played more than a thousand concerts with his trio. In addition, he has written the score for two original musicals and the arrangements for three others. He has appeared with several major orchestras as a part of his backing and guest soloist. Six successful record albums are credited to him.

Mac Frampton came to national prominence when he won the bronze medal in the 1969 Van Cliburn International Piano Competition. He holds the master’s and doctor’s degrees in music from Cincinnati University.

Frampton is not a stranger to Southern College. Two years ago Frampton premiered an “absolutely phenomenal composition.” Frampton’s article expresses an idea of fine quality and style...stimulating melody!” recalls Harry Brown, a senior environmental major. “He pulled out the stops and put his heart into playing,” said Keith Potts.

Probably the most impressive part of the concert was his medley of favorites—favorites selected by the audience and expertly performed a minute telephone call.

Hefferlin Heads for Denver

By Cynthia Watson

Dr. Ray Hefferlin, a graduate of the California Institute of Technology, has been a physics professor at Southern College since 1955. He has left Colledge for the University of Denver on a one-year sabbatical leave.

“My professional objective at the University of Denver is to begin writing a book on the research I’ve done over the past several years,” Dr. Hefferlin states. “Physicists are interested in the increased interest in his field, Dr. Hefferlin believes, “It is time to write a book on the subject.” His current research project, a periodic system for diatomic molecules, involves the arrangement of something similar to the chemist’s periodic chart of the elements. Since his research has gone so well in this area, Dr. Hefferlin has begun work on a system for three-atom molecules and is thinking about a system for four-atom molecules.

His students will miss him enormously. Junior physics major David Gentry describes him as enthusiastic, patient, and helpful, both in and out of the classroom. He remembers “Doc” as Dr. Hefferlin is fondly called, stating his grading motto: “I may not always be totally fair, but I do always claim to be consistent.”

Dr. Hefferlin received invitations from Los Angeles, and Auburn University but chose instead to take his sabbatical leave at the University of Denver. “The particular interests of the staff and geographic location of the University of Denver make it a good choice,” he says. He personally knew some of the staff. Also, travel expenses will be cut in half by this ideal location.

His speaking engagements will take him as far as Canada and Hawaii. December 21 he’ll be speaking in Honolulu on research done by computer and physics major Ken Priddy and chemistry major Eric Burton. In Toronto he’ll be reporting on research done with Henry Kahan. His last speaking engagement will be in May at Los Angeles.

His family has taken the move in stride. His wife’s plans to further their education with classes in interior design have been cancelled since the University doesn’t offer them. Melissa, his oldest daughter, doesn’t seem to mind giving up the office of Student Association President at College and Academy in order to be with her family.

Physics professor Henry Kushman, who has been an indispensable associate in Dr. Hefferlin in his research, says, “The physics department will miss him tremendously, and we’ll have to lop until he gets back. His presence will be especially missed by the school.”

Through the Business Executive Challenge to Alumni (BECA) program, the school has granted Dr. Hefferlin $5,000 for the expenses of traveling to consult with other specialists in his field of research. Those individuals that are interested in writing Dr. Hefferlin should do so at the following address: Physics Dept., University of Denver, Denver, CO, 80208.
We're Talkin' Proud!

Coming from New York, street language—should I say slang—is not unfamiliar to me. I will even use it at times, depending on the company I'm in. There is one phrase, though, that I have never really enjoyed, and because of that displeasure, I refuse to use the words: "we're talkin'," when used in slang manner. Just imagine, especially when used in a series of descriptions. For example, I was watching a televised football game one day, and the announcer, in his efforts to describe a receiver's speed, related to the viewers a similar line of descriptions as the following: "we're talkin' quick, we're talkin' lightning speed, we're talkin' mercury, we're talkin' ..." You get the picture? No so long ago, however, I heard those words used with the wooded following that and to my ears, they had a nice ring. "We're talkin' proud!" If you say the words loud enough, they sound pretty good. I believe we should adopt that line to describe this year.

You might ask, "What have we got to be proud of?" Allow me to answer in this manner although it is against my better judgment. We're talkin' higher-than-expected enrollment, we're talkin' Christian friends, we're talkin' Christian teachers, we're talkin' old friends, we're talkin' more and better facilities, we're talkin' a dedicated S.A., we're talkin' a new and exciting Sabbath School format, we're talkin' more Campus Ministries activities, we're talkin' a new Compugraphic machine, and, last but certainly not least, we're talkin' redecration of Talge Hall. In other words, we're talkin' proud! Everyone does not have the privilege of attending a Christian institution. Even less have the privilege of attending Southern College. We should be proud of our school and what it stands for. While it is true that secular colleges offer many incentives that a Seventh-day Adventist institution can not offer, the opposite of that statement is also true. Secular colleges cannot offer certain incentives that a college like ours can. Southern College provides an individual with the opportunity to fellowship with those who believe the same way he does. It provides him with the chance to get closer to his Lord. If you were to read the Southern College Student Handbook, you might find that is the reason to fulfill the school's mission for this student's body. After a few years of hardship, Southern College has begun to take greater strides again. For that reason, we should adopt the line "We're talkin' proud!" as this year's motto. All things considered, 1984-85 promises to be exciting.
Once upon a time there was a man, named Pilgrim, who lived in the eastern mountains. And there, he was told by Mr. Speaker that if he was to carry the name Pilgrim he needed to go to the Holy City. Mr. Speaker reminded him of the distant mountain and told him that the Holy City was on that mountain. Pilgrim looked as carefully as he could, and he could only see a peak of the peak of the mountain. He wasn’t sure that he could make it to that faint glimmer, it looked so distant and vague. He told Mr. Speaker that there was no hope for him, for the journey looked too difficult.

Mr. Speaker was persistent though and determined to him the glory of life in a distant city, convincing him that he should go. Still, Pilgrim was sure that there was no way he could make the journey. Mr. Speaker then told him that it wasn’t hard because others had gone before him, and they had painted a white line for travelers to the Holy City to follow. He promised that with a line to follow he could probably make it, and so he started his journey to the Holy City from Eladegelloc. At the beginning of the journey, he had found that everything went very smoothly. He had a very clear, very white line to follow that was very wide and clearly distinguishable from all that surrounded it. "This trip will be easy," he thought to himself as his journey began, "it is all so clear to me now."

He traveled quickly as he kept his head down following the white line around buildings, through streets, and across hills. His confidence level increased as he moved along until he came to a place where the white line was not as clear as it had been. It looked as though it had been smudged. The farther he got from Eladegelloc, the less clear the line seemed to. The dimmer the line became, the more he focused on it, or what was left of it, and he found himself needing to crawl along the road to keep track of the white line. The edge of the line was hardly distinguishable; in fact, the line became rather gray as he traveled along and its direction was no longer absolutely certain. Pilgrim, more determined than ever to follow the line, purchased a magnifying glass, so he could be sure of the location of the line.

The magnifying glass soon proved to be inadequate, and so he obtained a "Line Detection Light Meter*" which was conveniently for sale just to the side of the road. The salesman said that this instrument could pick up a difference in reflectivity of just one lumen over the distance of 2 meters. With the help of this instrument Pilgrim was able to travel a bit more rapidly along the road.

It wasn’t long, however, before even the "Line Detection Light Meter*" wasn’t enough, and so he purchased a microscope which was conveniently for sale just to the side of the road. The salesman said that this microscope would be able to pick up pigments of paint that was just a couple of microns across so that he could be sure and know that he was following the line.

The trip to the Holy City was becoming drudgery to Pilgrim. Each day he was getting out his line detection equipment looking for paint and seeking to distinguish the gray from the white. In the process of focusing on the line he lost sight of the Holy City, but he did make some interesting discoveries.

One of Pilgrim’s discoveries made by using a Cellog counter was that the true white paint that most have been used by the best traveler to precede him had a distinguishing characteristic compound in it. This discovery, of course, meant that he would be able to invent a machine that could detect the line and its direction even though there were only a few molecules of paint on the road. He obtained a patent on this new line detection equipment. He named the instrument the “True Radiocative Line Detection Meter" and contracted with a local pilgrim store to sell his device.

The advertising was impressive: “Guaranteed pure line detection for passing pilgrims.” He set up his own shop and made a killing on travelers to the Holy City. Sales from the meter were fantastic, and he made a great deal of money. He found it was good for business to give generously to prophets who encountered the travelers on the road. He would even give a percentage to prophets who referred customers. He invested his profits in the community at the foot of the mountain and lived comfortably beside the path leading to the Holy City.

One day Mr. Speaker, the one who sent him on his journey, visited him. Pilgrim proudly showed off his fancy equipment and told him how it certainly must have saved many a traveler from straying from the true line. “You see,” he told Mr. Speaker, “everything is so gray that by the time the travelers pass through here they just don’t know which way to go unless they buy my instrument.”

“Have you ever thought why things go gray here?” asked Mr. Speaker.

“No,” replied Pilgrim, “I just know from personal experience that without my equipment you simply can’t detect a line past this city.”

“But why is it that you can’t detect a line here, and it is so clear down in the valley?” persisted Mr. Speaker.

“I don’t know,” said Pilgrim. “I’ll tell you why,” continued Mr. Speaker. “Look up at the mountain.”

Pilgrim looked up at the mountain peak and covered his eyes, for they were blinded with the light from the mountain.

“You see” continued Mr. Speaker, “from here the travelers can see the Holy City so clearly that they are no longer concerned about the lines and whether they are gray or white. When you are this close to the Holy City, if you focus on the goal, your feet will stay on the right path.”

Dr. Allen Replaces Futcher

By Moni Gennick

Dr. William Merle Allen is our new vice-president of academic affairs at Southern College, replacing Dr. Cyril Fitcher who retired this summer.

Dr. Allen is a native of California and has spent the last 16 years teaching chemistry at La Sierra of Loma Linda University. However, he is more than just a chemistry professor from the west coast.

During his career he has served on various university committees and organizations, as well as involving himself in areas apart from the university. For example, he served on an advisory committee that deals with air pollution control and was a curator of minerals at the World Museum of Natural History at Loma Linda.

Dr. Allen holds membership in the American Chemical Society and has received several honors and awards for his research in the chemistry field. In response to the question of whether he misses California, Dr. Allen answers, "Once you have an attitude to serve, the location is really secondary. Job satisfaction is more important, and I'm planning on a long-term commitment to this particular position."

Concerning his jump from scientist to administrator, Dr. Allen remarks that he considers himself both an educator first and scientist second. "I've enjoyed the administrative work that I have done in the past and look forward to doing it fulltime. I feel I have already done all I could do in teaching, and this provides me with new areas of challenge and growth."

Dr. Allen's goals for the college is to form a long-range plan of strategy to keep the college alive and vital in the face of a rapidly changing job market and a national decline in college-age students.

"Many people will change their jobs several times during their life," explained Dr. Allen. "This puts additional pressure on general education, demanding a solid foundation that will allow for easier adaptation to change."

The faculty's concern is in developing new programs to meet these needs, and Dr. Allen cautions students against limiting their education into narrow channels which will constrict their job opportunities and/or changes in the future.

Dr. Allen also encourages students to take part in the spiritual and social activities offered here at Southern so as not to miss out in their total college experience. He, himself, was very involved in sports during his college days and enjoys participating in them even now. And, of course, he follows the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I feel that one of the great strengths of this college is that it is so solid in all three areas of college life: spiritual, social, and academic," said Dr. Allen. "Although academics is my main concern, I look forward to being on campus with the students and having them participate in the other activities."

Without a doubt, Dr. Allen will contribute a lot to our college, but he would like the students to know that they also make a difference. "Good academic performance challenges a teacher," he stated, "and attentiveness and appreciation encourages him. These things have a very big impact on the academic level which is achieved."

Susan Davidson

Another new addition is Dr. Gerald Colvin. Dr. Colvin is a returning staff member. He was here at Southern College from 1972-1982 as the Behavioral Science Department Chairman, and Professor of Psychology and Education. He has spent the last two years as Vice-President of Academic Affairs at Northwestern Adventist College before returning here to Southern College. Dr. Colvin has his PhD in educational psychology, which he received from the University of Georgia in 1980. His family consists of his wife Gayle, a school administrator in Hamilton County and his two children Guy and Gayle. One of Dr. Colvin's hobbies is writing. Now Will I Sing is his latest published work. Another hobby is Ping-Pong, in which he will take on any challengers.

RICHARD ERICKSON

The business department has also added a new staff member, Richard Erickson. He is originally from Minnesota but has lived here in Coosggdale for the last 13 years. Previously, he worked in finance and accounting for a local corporation. Erickson has BS in accounting and his MBA, which he received from Austin Peay University. Erickson considers himself a family man. He has a lovely wife, Sandy, and two children, Jonathan and Julie. His interests vary from photography to traveling and camping.

PATTI SPEER

The new secretary to academic administrator William Allen is Patti Speer. She was born in Indiana and has lived in Michigan, Africa, and Florida. Patti is married to the pastor of the Cohutta church, and has 3 children: two sons ages 17 and 13; and a daughter, age 18. Patti enjoys her work at the college, but she also enjoys other hobbies, such as sewing and baking.
Susan Bofink

The women's dormitory has added a new staff member as well, Samantha Walter. Mrs. Walter has a degree in elementary education which she received from Southern in 1981. She has taught 2 years at the elementary school level and last year was an assistant in Thatcher before being hired full time this year. She was recently married to Doug Walter, who works as the production manager at WSMC Radio. Sam, as she is commonly known, enjoys flower arranging, riding motorcycles, and getting to know people.

Merlin Wittenberg works in the admissions office. At the time of this interview, he was out of town and could not be reached.

President...

some of those issues that never seem to die, such as the rising cost of Christian education and the name change of our institution?

Let me separate the issues. First of all, the rising cost of education will always be an issue. Mr. Reiner was attending some meetings for the Adventist colleges' business managers and brought back a report and Southern is still—next to Oakwood, they are still the lowest, but it is because they receive subsidies from the General Conference—the lowest coming college. That is what comfort when there is still a $2000 gap between resources and charges, but I still believe that there is a will there is a way. We have a commitment to doing whatever we can to help students (work their way through college). We recently repurchased the broomship, and it is now generating $600 a month in student labor credit. Our REACH program is another evidence of that commitment. It is all going to cost money. But we believe that with some creative work with students and by opening up more opportunities for student labor, those who really want an Adventist Christian education can get it.

As for the name change, there is still a board meeting charged with the responsibility of studying it. There has been some study. Probably within the next week, a survey will be going out to the alumni, feeling their opinions on the name. We have noticed that some of the alumni are somewhat unhappy but more so about the process than the name change.

Just one last thought, Dr. Wagner. What message would you want both faculty and students to remember through this coming school year?

Relationship with the Lord is fundamental to everything else we do on a Christian college campus. I believe in excellence; I believe in quality. But on a Christian college campus, relationship has to take first priority.

FAMOUS LAST WORDS FROM FRIENDS TO FRIENDS.

"Are you OK to drive?"
"What's a few beers?"

"Did you have too much to drink?"
"I'm perfectly fine."

"Are you in any shape to drive?"
"I've never felt better."

"I think you've had a few too many."
"You kiddin, I can drive with my eyes closed."

"You've had too much to drink, let me drive."
"Nobody drives my car but me."

"Are you OK to drive?"

MONDAY

Aguilera 5, Dickerhoff 2

Dean Schlimmer went 3 for 3 with three doubles and had 3 RBIs as Aguilera downed Dickerhoff in the “A League” opener Monday night.

Aguilera jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first when, following walks to Kent Boyle and Col. Peyton, Schlimmer ripped the first of his three two-baggers to right-center. Boyle and Peyton scored and Schlimmer added one out later when Mike McCann's third strike was dropped by catcher Leno Troby.

Dean Schlimmer also pitched a good game as he struck out four, walked two and was annointed over all the seventh inning when Mike Dickerhoff doubled in one run and David Kneb scored on a ground out by Ron Queen.

Drab 3, Sutton 1

In the “B League” opener, Dan Pyle went 3 for 4 and Jack D'Alar had 2 RBIs in Aguilera's team victory. Pyle stopped a one-out double to night, advanced to two on a ground out and came across on Drab's double to create a 1-0 lead in the second. Drab added two more in the seventh and Sutton scored their run in the seventh also.

Guam counted on us.

The campaign slogan that�s marked Guam on May 22, 1970 isn't on the front pages anymore. It will be a long time before Red Cross forgets. Because we were there, too. We didn't forget. Guam was only one of 30,000 disasters in the last 17 months where we were called on for major help. Which is the measure our disaster funds are disseminated. And an important reason we need your continued support.

Help us. Because the things we do really help. In your own neighborhood. And across America. And the world.

Have you ever had a cynical day? I'm finding one right now. In fact, it started when I made myself some oatmeal this morning. “Stir oats into briskly boiling water.” Briskly? Is that a word for boiling water? I'd suppose we'd all be brisk if we were boiled. Who's the guy on the Quaker Oats box? Why is he smiling so much? Probably because he's got a monopoly on oats. Why is it Quaker? Are there Catholic oats too? What's this with the honey jar? “Retains all original minerals and elements.” Sounds full of metal to me. Is that like “fortified with iron”? That's all cereals. I bought a box of “Halfsies” yesterday. Does that mean it's half full? Maybe it's for halfwits. Am I getting involved? There's that dumb Quaker guy again. (Does he like his kitchen or something?)

Maybe Halfsies are for people who don't want to go all the way. Just halfway. Can that mean something else? Did you ever fight for the free inside? Did you ever win? Did you ever buy a cereal just for the prize? Did you know that if you opened the bottom first you could get the prize easier? Did you know that if you forgot the opened bottom, Cap'n Crunch would be getting crunched all over the floor? What happened to Quisp? Why do sugar-cereals have prizes and not Product 19? These are serious questions. Did you ever stick Chiquita banana stickers on your nose? Here's a can of Shasta soda. It says they want a pop. Should we give it to them? If they wanted a soda, they'd ask for it. It says it's strawberry soda. That's why the letters are red. You wouldn't find a red root-beer can, would you? Why are Sprite cans green? Sprite's not green. It says real-lemon lime flavor—exclamation mark. Am I supposed to be excited too? Here's some Oil of Olay. It says “Become beautiful-use Oil of Olay.” I never used it. Am I ugly? No comment. Oil of Olay looks like Pepsi-Bismol. Is it? Do you remember Dippy-doo? I used to smear it as a kid. My mother sneered me here. It'a a bottle of Thousand Island dressing. It says that it is “A simply delightful salad dressing.” Delightful? Should I talk to it? What do I do if it answers? Why does Ma Bell keep wanting me to reach out and touch someone? You could get your fingers broken. Ever see a new car ad? Why is there always a bikini-clad woman lying on the hood? Does she come with it? If not, they should tell her to go home and buy some clothes. Am I missing something? Remember being in mixed company in academy, at a faculty home watching TV? Remember how quiet it got when Cathy Rigby came on? It was very embarrassing. It must have been more embarrassing to find out you couldn't reply on Rely anymore. What's happening to our country? Who is Jorache? Is that French for “HORSE” I always see a little horse brand on Jordache jeans. Maybe it's saying you have to have a horse-like rear. (I wear Levis). What about Gloria Vander- bilt? She's so ugly. Maybe she thinks Pepsi-Bismol is Oil of Olay. Why is her name on her jeans? Maybe it makes her feel good to know millions are sitting on her name. She's strange. Strange and ugly.

Arnold Missing at '50's Bash
by Dennis Negro

The student association held their annual welcome party on Saturday evening, September 1. However, someone was missing, making the evening slightly disappointing. One of the attractions of the night was to have been a greased pig competition, in which students would have tried their hands at catching and holding onto the greased animal. But apparently “Arnold” (given that name from the Green Acres television series) did not want to get dirty and Saturday night because he did not show up.

What actually happened was that the farmer from whom the pig was to have been rented had forgotten to get him out before sunset. Not wanting to be undermined in his efforts to retrieve the pig, he refused to enter the sty.

However, the evening's other festivities helped everyone forget that “Arnold” never made it. During the course of the evening, two hits of the fifties—“Itsy, Bitsy, Teeny, Weeny, Yellow-Popka-Dot Bikini” and “Mr. Sandman”—were sung by the Southernaires, Ron Qualley, Mike McClung, Ed Kephinger, Bob Jimenez, and Macri Lang.

In addition, group games were played in a class competition style. To start off, a game called “bucket brigade relay” in which a line of 50 classmates had to fill a gallon bucket with paper cups was played. The juniors were victors in that one. Then the seniors took the next three games—the madness relay, another form of charades; the whistling contest, in which one had to whistle with his mouth full of crackers; and the bat relay, in which individuals had to do ten revolutions around a bat while their heads were touching one end of the bat and the ground the other end. Finally, a bubble-gum-blowing contest ended the team activities, with the sophomores winning.

The night ended with a costume judging contest. First, second, and third prizes were given, with $15, $10, and $5 gift certificates to Taco Bell being the awards, respectively. David continued on page 8

Milliken’s Keys to Learning

J. T. Shin

A California learning and motivation specialist is sharing keys to learning with students, faculty, and the general college community on our campus this week.

Dr. Harold R. Milliken, professor of biology at La Sierra, California, has made a study of effective learning methods and has shared them at two meetings in Summerour Hall and at our general assembly last Tuesday.

When Dr. William Allen accepted the position of Vice-President for Academic Administration, he was told, “One of the best things you can do for Southern is to get Hal Milliken on the SC campus.” To which Dr. Allen responded, “It’s already been arranged.”

Dr. Milliken is not only a former colleague of our Dr. Allen, but is a former teacher at Shenandoah Valley Academy where he taught. Our college president, Dr. John Wagner, whom he recalls as “a very good student.”

Dr. Milliken will be on our campus the entire week of September 9 to 14 meeting with classes and individuals. Those wishing to meet with him may arrange meetings through Carole Haynes at the Teaching Learning Center.

One doesn’t catch him while he is here you can listen to his tape at the TLC—or buy one from him. His address is, “The Key to Learning Unlimited,” 7420 Sierra Vista Ave, Riverside, CA 92505.

The tape captures the essence of his philosophy and techniques. Some quotes, “The learning of learning has been largely left to chance...visualizaion ability, not innate intelligence afffects grades...the ability to visualize can be learned.”

On his tape he quotes a psychologist, “Anyone can learn anything if it is broken down into small enough pieces.” Some specific techniques to accomplish this: memorize in groups of three, play large Baroque music in the background while studying, use large flashcards, notes and books, spend less time note-taking in class and visualize.

He views the mind as “a multisensory visual processor and not primarily a word processor...capable of learning large volumes of material rapidly, easily and permanently.” He believes that if we take techniques that the top students use and teach them to ‘average’ students, they too will be able to learn well.

He cites one example of a history student who decided to give his method a try. She quit note-taking and instead stared out the window during the lecture and visualized the events. Though not recommended for all, this technique worked very well.

Positive attitude is important. He recommends that you avoid negative thinking and people who do. “Buy some positive thinking tapes and read a few pages everyday.” He concludes his tape with, “Success to each of you.”

Mac Comes Back

Brent Van Arsdell

Mac Frampton returned for his “first concert of the fall season” to “a larger audience,” than when he last came to Southern 2 years ago. Comparing audiences Mac said, “It was a wonderful response before, and it was wonderful tonight.” Senior education major Kent Greve testified, “This is the best of all the Artist Adventure Series that I have been to.”

“Awesome, it left me breathless,” said Benjamin Santana. “He has what it takes to play piano,” he continued. Frampton’s selections ranged from classical to pop. He can play anything. “If I know it I’ll play it but if I don’t know it, I’ll play it for you anyway,” Mac said before taking twenty favorites for his concluding medley. He did what he was promised. The requests includ- ed a diversity of styles such as: “The Warwark Concerto”, “Endless Love”, “Prechule in C sharp” and “MASH”, and “Rockey Top”.

The more popular tunes of the medley where greeted with spontaneous applause. Some unexpected variations such as the reoccurrence of “Rockey Top” in a minor key brought smiles and laughter.

Frampton took the time to relate his musical life history. Mac was born a “PK” (Preacher’s Kid) in South Carolina and gave his first recital at the age of seven. After that recital “his lady reached into her purse and pulled out a crisp $10 bill and handed it to me. I haven’t been the same since. It was like an electric light bulb went off in my head. You mean they pay you for this? I went home and practiced a little bit harder the next day.”

This practice has evidently paid off. He has performed over 1500 concerts in the last decade throughout the US, Canada, Europe, and the Middle East. He has 60 more concerts booked before Christmas.

The music he played was greeted with varying responses. John Wagner, President of Southern College, called it, “Interesting.” James Clark, senior computer science major, “Pretty good.” Another student, Debra Odell, said it was, “Informative.”

Most people enjoyed the concerto immensely and were duly impressed. When asked to comment, Carmen Perez said, “Liberman eat your heart out.”

Typesetting Made Easy

The Southern Accent has recently acquired a new typesetting machine to aid in the production of its paper. The Compugraphic MCS typesetting system is a specialized computer designed for paper production.

The machine was installed in the latter part of the summer. A trainer was sent once the MCS was installed to instruct Jook Ting Shim (SA Presi- dent), Dennis Negron (Accent Editor) and John Seaman (Assistant Accent Editor) on the machine functions.

The new Compugraphic Typesetter arose out of the need for a more reliable machine. The older one began having many breakdowns at more fre- quent intervals and soon it became apparent that the machine was more trouble than it was worth. Maureen Mayden (1983-84 Accent Editor) pushed to get a new Compugraphic and the Senate voted to obtain the machine. It was not certain which machine would be purchased. Several options were available, one being the suggestion of acquiring a daisy-wheel computer printer. The poor-print quality and non-versatility ruled out this option. The decision was finally made to purchase the MCS system.

The funds for the $15,000 system came from Student Association surplus over the past decade and the jog-a-thon fund raiser which contributed to the project. The large sum of money spent will hopefully be justified by the speed in which the paper will be produced and the low cost of maintenance.

The only preventive maintenance which needs to be done on the machine is the periodic cleaning of a small filter on the bottom of the typesetter. During the training session on the use of the machine, the trainer commented that the production of the Southern Accent should be cut in half in which all the capabilities of the machine are being utilized.

The versatility of the MCS can be seen when compared to the older Compugraphic machine. The MCS is capable of creating a much larger letter size then the older version, and this allows for headlines to be typed rather than making the headline letter-by-letter in a headline machine. A Statement of Mission

Last week I made a reference to the school’s statement of mission. Many of us probably have never read that paragraph found in the inner flap of the bulletin. This statement helps guide Southern College in its policy making. Without it, the school would lose its sense of direction. No answer could be given to the question “Why?” And when that question cannot be answered, few appreciate the rules and regulations, lifestyle, and the order of things on a Seventh-day Adventist campus. In order that people may understand my decisions as editor this year, I wish to state my statement of mission.

Because Southern College is a Christian institution, I believe that all aspects of the school should reflect Christianity, including the student newspaper. Some may say, then, that I am following the footsteps of the Adventist Review or the Southern Columns. They may feel that it is impossible for me to reach the proper height that a student newspaper should be, because I must either be another theological publication or a public relations tool for the school.

Contrary to that opinion, neither of the two are true, although the Southern Accent is a public relations tool to an extent. It is possible to be a Christian newspaper and report both good and bad news. It is also possible to print a “Southern Cynic” column and the “Classifieds,” and still be serious and funny within the same issue. A Christian newspaper, however, loses its label when only the bad is emphasized and rarely the good, when raunchy and distasteful articles are printed and not the opposite.

As Southern Accent editor, then, I reserve the right to use my Christian judgment in deciding whether an article, a letter, or a classified is the proper material to put in an issue.

There is a time to let things happen and a time to make things happen.

Wittenberg Admits All

Moni Gennick

Mr. Merlin Wittenberg has joined the staff of Southern College as admissions advisor to Dr. Ron Barrow. He will be working with recruitment, admissions, counseling, and as High School guidance liaison. Although his work will often take him off campus, he looks forward to becoming acquainted with the students at Southern.

For the past 18 years Wittenberg has taught elementary school, the last seven of which have been at Spalding Elementary School in College Dale.

Wittenberg is an alumnus of Southern College and also a former staff member. He received his B.S. in Elementary Education and later earned a master’s in administration and supervision from the University of Arkansas. In 1969–70 Wittenberg served as the assistant dean of men here at Southern College.

Mr. Howard Kennedy, principal at Spalding Elementary and former boss of Mr. Wittenberg, stated that Wittenberg was extremely innovative in his classroom teaching, and ran a strong spiritual program. Anyone can safely assume that these qualities will carry over into Wittenberg’s new position.

“The absence is felt,” said Kennedy, “but his influence remains.”

“I feel Christian education begins in the elementary school system,” said Wittenberg. “But we need to see it through the upper levels of learning as well.”

The Accent is celebrating forty years of publication. Look for our special anniversary issue on October 11.

Second-Hand High

If a mother smokes marijuana in the same room an infant lies and the infant breathes the cannabinoids in the smoke, the baby would be intoxicated,’ said Dr. Ingrid L. Lantner in an interview in the September 1984 issue of LISTEN magazine.

Dr. Lantner, a practicing pediatrician in Ohio, has lectured widely on the dangers of marijuana use. She has also testified before the U.S. Senate and has appeared on numerous TV and radio shows. In the LISTEN interview Dr. Lantner stresses dangers to the children of marijuana users.

“I see babies that are high,’ said Dr. Lantner. ‘I have had several mothers tell me they get the baby high, and the pot keeps sleeping for hours. It doesn’t even require any feedings.’

Another problem that Dr. Lantner reports is that of parents who offer marijuana to their young children. Some of these children start actively smoking the drug at the age of eighteen months or two years. This problem is particularly hard to deal with, since getting a child high is not currently considered child abuse, so social agencies are reluctant to intervene.

Dr. Lantner goes on to say that children who see their parents using marijuana will probably start using it themselves at an early age. “And if children start using drugs early,’ she says, “there is almost no chance that they will be able to stop at turn back time and maturity normally, because they actually won’t know what normal is.”

Lori Phone Home

Lori Heineman

Tuesday, the day after registration, was my predestined fall cleaning day. Put simply, that meant I finally got to clean out my desk, including the bottom drawer. I seem to be collecting half-used notebooks in the bottom drawer of my desk. Some don't even belong to me: these ratty ones with the covers torn off of them must belong to my brother. I know they are old since several aren't college ruled, and it has been years since Rich or I would be caught writing on such pristine paper. I can't throw them away in good conscience, and will be ages until I use them as scrap paper, so I industriously decided to write letters on them. In theory, this is a great idea because I write tons of letters, but sometimes I want to write on something pretty or pastel, so the ol' notebook is tossed back into the drawer. Unfortunately, I have developed the habit of writing in the middle of the notebook where the pages are free from wrinkles and word imprints; then mindlessly closing the notebook, the half-written letter suffocates between the pages and dies of old age. This year I could put the ultimate off no longer, 1 decided to throw away these old faithfuls. Quickly acting upon my decision before I could change my mind, I flipped through the pages for valuables. I spotted my own handwriting and thumbed back until I found it. It was an old letter to my best friend, Heather. I read the first few lines and remembered that this was the letter when I was trying to convince her to come down to Orlando "to see me before you journey' to the other end of the country." I begged her to give me just two days of her time before she moved to Colorado with her family. "This is our last chance to explore Florida together before I move to College Dale next month." I wrote, desperately attempting to see her once more, since I feared I would never see her again. I think I was still in shock at the time I wrote the letter. Heather and I were always far apart, but I was the only one who moved around. She was supposed to stay at home base so I would have somewhere to return to. I couldn't believe she would be gone. My letter ended there, with no conclusion. I seemed to close my unresolved problem between the pages of the book to be forgotten. So there I sat, in the middle of my floor, among crumpled paper and aged spiral notebooks, thinking—thinking not about Heather now, but about God and how ironic it is that all of a sudden I realize how much He parallels Heather. Far away, yet He is always there if I need Him. I move around, but He stays, letting me know that I have a home to come to if I choose. I feel guilty that I have waited so long to let Him know my choice. Have I waited too long? Is that why He had me find this letter—to open my eyes to my procrastination? I think back and remember why I never finished the letter—I phoned Heather instead. Maybe God is trying to tell me something; He's afraid of being closed in The Book and suffocated between the pages. He wants me to phone Him.

Commitment Achieved

La Ronda Curtis

Last weekend was SC's 15th annual Collegiate Commitment Weekend. Many commitments were made verbally, actively, and some silently. The weekend got off to a good beginning with Ralph Peas's chapel talk about living up to our label. Ralph Peas is the Youth Director for the Southern Union. He had attended SC's commitment weekends for several years. However, he says that this year, "the spirit on campus is very positive." He talked about a special "vibration" in the students that will make this a good school year.

Also, it was nice to have the Youth Directors here for the weekend. Bill Wood, Jim Pleasants, Louis Hendershot, Myrtle Rouse, and C.E. Branchbridge were the directors here representing their respective conferences. Thursday night the faculty challenged these youth directors to a game of softball. In years past, the faculty has usually won by a wide margin. This time it was a very close game. The faculty did not take the lead until the sixth inning, hanging on for the lead, so the record is still good.

Friday night was a big highlight of the weekend. Elder Tetz, this year's primary speaker, talked about making commitments and keeping them. He was also the speaker of the Sabbath worship hour.

There he spoke about Christians being a "burning bush" for God.

Also on Sabbath, Dale Tunnell presented a Sabbath School program that made students and church members aware of the religious activities for the C.A.R.E. (Collegiate Adventist Reaching Everyone) ministry on campus. For the afternoon, Tunnell and Jim Herman invited the students to take religious surveys and hand out literature to people in Summit and Eastridge. Eighty-two students accepted the invitation and rode to Chattanooga on buses. Tunnell said, "it was a successful outing. The people who went out didn't want to quit when the time came."

Daniel Drapula, a student who went along, said that he was a little nervous about going, but it was fun once he got started, and he met a lot of nice people who were interested in what he was sharing.

To close the Sabbath, a sing-spiration on the steps of Lynn Wood Hall was attended by a large group, filling practically all the stairs. Tunnell plans to make this a regular occasion since so many students enjoyed it. It was a pleasant way to end the Sabbath.

Sunday morning many students found their way to the student park for a free pancake breakfast. Both faculty members and youth directors were working hard over the grills to keep the line of students moving. This got together ended a successful Commitment Weekend.
We the People...

Why Is Reagan So Popular?

Russell Duerksen

Detroit, 1980...the convention hall falls silent as the Republican nominee quotes Franklin D. Roosevelt. Dallas, 1984...that same nominee smiles broadly as he is interrupted numerous times with shouts of "four more years" during the final debate. His speechmanship, two seemingly diverse but similar events, yet they typify the political career of Ronald Wilson Reagan.

Few modern American politicians have as forcefully expressed and acted upon their basic political beliefs as has Ronald Reagan. In his career as a politician, he has disseminated deeply-held philosophies, challenged basic ideology, and by providing a right-wing course for the Republican party, created the greatest upheaval in American politics since Franklin Roosevelt.

His politics, strongly conservative, are to the right of the average American and a recent poll showed that less than 40% of the populace were in total agreement with the majority of them. Yet he held a 12-17% lead on his Democratic opponent, Walter Mondale, at the start of the Fall campaign. Why is this the case, and what are the reasons behind this political phenomenon?

First of all, Reagan has shown a mastery of the "bully pulpit" of the Presidency, not since the era of the Roosevelts, has one done this. He is able to present to him the image of this ability, along with his natural charisma, allows him to function as the "Great Commissioner" and to deliver his message so pleasantly and effectively that many who would not normally do, so support his policies without totally realizing the he is in agreement.

Secondly, his unique abilities have allowed for the formation of what has been called "the Tejon Presidency." Through a combination of charisma, good humor, political savvy, and good luck, he has been able to prevent his political opponents from assigning his presidency responsibility for politically-damaging events, such as the Lebanese car-bomb attack. Similar events would have commonly led the administrations of Ford, Nixon, or Carter.

The third aspect of his strengths is in his style of leadership. While Carter had a detail-oriented, college-professor style of presidency, emphasizing problems and asking solutions, Reagan has a more down-line approach, telling the people what's right about America and then getting into the problems. Granted, the emphasis on God, motherhood, and apple pie is not especially relevant to the major issues, but the average citizen wants, wishes, and needs to hear something positive about himself and his country, and that need is an essential part of the American president, of which the majority of the the more recent presidents have ignored.

The final reason for his unique popularity is the fact that he is in brown celebrity. Having been in the public eye for approximately 20 years, he has expressed his political philosophy, and by and large, has done all he said he would, even under strong pressure to do otherwise. This adherence to his beliefs has created respect, and perhaps some support, because the average person honors consistency and stability, even if he doesn't agree with what is being done.

Although much has been said about the "Reagan Revolution" and America's shift to the right, the shift is much less substantial than it appears. The large lead which the President enjoys is more a commitment to a man than to a collection of political ideas, to a "New Beginning" in American politics.

In closing, let us consider a little history. Fifty years ago, Franklin Roosevelt was the dynamic leader of a seemingly unstoppable philosophy and political movement to change the way America functioned. Then, only a few years after Roosevelt was gone, his party lost the Congress, the White House, and its momentum. Ronald Reagan does well to assume the mantle of Roosevelt, for he is truly his equal, but his party, and all America would do well to remember the records of history and the results of building a majority around a man instead of an idea.

Politicians: Past, Present, and Future

Gart Curtis

For the most part, students here at Southern College tend to think of politicians as too far removed to make any difference. Whether it's the left or the right in the White House, life around the dorm, up at the library, or even down at the CK doesn't change much. We let our enthusiasm for current events slide and take only a mild interest in the micro scene of school politics.

But there are SC student politicians, Glenn McIlroy, Russell Duerksen, and J.T. Shian, that have put their knowledge to use. They have compiled the statistics, the data, the numbers, to create a reality that is different from the majority of their peers.

Glenn McIlroy, last year's S.A. President, worked under Sen. Denton from Alabama as a state senator intern. After getting a resume and being interviewed, Glenn was one of twenty people chosen from one-hundred-eighthy applicants for one internship.

Glenn, one of the five interns chosen for the month of August, worked in the legislation section of the Senator's office. His duties included doing research on pending legislation, writing letters to constituents, and helping to prepare the Senator's briefing book on current events.

After graduating from SC Glenn will go on to law school and from there possibly into politics. Law, however, is his primary interest right now.

Russell Duerksen was a floor aid for Sen. Goldwater and Sen. DeGroat, both of Arizona, in Washington D.C. last summer. He got involved through the U.S. Senate Youth Program. The U.S.S.Y.P. is a yearly contest in which two delegates from each state are chosen; Russell was one of the privileged few.

As a floor aid, Russell's major responsibility was to keep track of the Senator's papers (many of which were classified documents) and have them ready and in order upon command. Russell has also worked the two previous summers in Arizona for Sen. Goldwater, organizing youth drives designed to increase young people's interest in voting on the Republican ticket.

Russell wants to go to Georgetown School of Law and from there into national politics (but never as a bureaucrat). J.T. Shian (SC S.A. Pres.) worked as an unpaid intern in Congressman Albert Gore Jr.'s office for two weeks in July.

He got the job by doing a lot of pavement pounding around the House office buildings, dropping by frequently to the Tennessee delegate's office, and generally getting connected through "all the right people." J.T. answered the telephone, responded to constituent mail, compiled statistics of the Congress's attendance and voting record at various meetings and searched newspapers to clip articles pertaining to the Congressman's work. He also contacted hospitals to look for liver (live human liver); the Congressman is heading a campaign for a more efficient way of getting liver from donors to those who are in need.

While J.T. does not have any specific directions in politics, he wants to keep his options open. To do that he will try to get a White House Fellowship which is an unpaid year-long job in the White House working for a Cabinet secretary, the Vice President, or senior member of the President's staff.

Though each of the three had different experiences, they all agreed that they had an informative overview of the American political process. This combined with the lessons in time management and in dealing with larger numbers of people who have varying opinions, not only helped them with their duties in the S.A., but it reinforced their desire to become more involved in making the decisions that shape our country's future.

Subliminally Speaking

Campus Digest News Service

The first conscious knowledge many college students have of subliminal perception probably revolves around a discussion held in an advertising or marketing class. (Subliminal perception is that which relies on messages buried within a medium, perceived by the subconscious—even though they can't be seen or heard consciously.) But disagreement abounds on whether subliminal messages really exist...or whether they are figments of the imagination.

Studies are inconclusive on the existence or effectiveness of subliminal messages, but enough evidence existed by 1974 for the Federal Communications Commission to warn its licensees against using subliminal advertising over public airwaves.

Advertisers, of course, deny use of sneaky messages in their ads, despite media critics' charges that a great many ads—both broadcast and print—are bombarding us with subliminal connections between products and sexual messages or buying suggestions. Cigarette and liquor ads have been accused of flashing death symbols at viewers/readers for those who seem to enjoy flirting with danger.

Now, however, a small Michigan company, Stimutech, has introduced a positive way to use subliminal perception. By using a TV set, home computer, $90 interface (connecting device) and $40 program, Stimutech proposes using this controversial conditioning to lose weight, control stress, stop smoking or drinking, boost career success, or improve sex life, athletic skills or study habits.

The computer program flashes messages ("I am confident!" to "I can stop smoking") across the screen at 1/30th of a second every 2½ minutes. Stimutech doesn't plan any experiments testing the effectiveness of the program.

"What we know today is that the brain sees and hears more than the eyes and ears," says Wallace LaBenne, and East Lansing (Mich) psychology professor. "We want to bypass the censorship of the left brain (which evaluates) and go to the right brain (which controls habits and attitudes)." LaBenne suggests using the new product in conjunction with therapy for best effectiveness. But despite almost 30 years of suspicion of its existence, hard evidence of subliminal perception is still inconclusive.

The first conscious knowledge many college students have of subliminal perception probably revolves around a discussion held in an advertising or marketing class. (Subliminal perception is that which relies on messages buried within a medium, perceived by the subconscious—even though they can’t be seen or heard consciously.) Southern Hosts Triathlon

Cindy Watson

The triathlon coming up Sunday, September 23, will be a first for Southern College. One-event competitions have been held previously but never swimming, biking, and running all in one competition.

At 7 a.m., the race will start off with a 1-mile freestyle swim at the Cottahua Springs lake. Then one must ride a bike from Cottahua to Collegeville, which is 28.5 miles, ending where the run begins, in front of the gym. The jaunt around the church, up to a cemetery, through the ball field, and around again two more times make up the 6.2 mile run.

Coach Kamienski guesses a good timing for the whole event will be a little under three hours. The timing of the race is as difficult to predict as the calibar of the athletes.

However, Kamienski estimates a good 15 to 20 minutes for the swim, 2 hours for the bike ride, and 40 minutes for the run.

This averages out to be a 40 minute per mile swim, 12 to 15 mph bike ride, and a 6.5 minute per mile run.

Contestants will be competing against all age groups and both sexes. The competition will not be open to the public, however, a few surrounding academies will be participating. "This year will serve as a sort of trial run," says Kamienski. "Next year we'll know more about it, invite the participation of the public, and group contestants according to age and gender."

Medallions will be awarded to each of the expected 24 to 25 contestants. Special awards will be given to the academy with the four best contestants and naturally, to the overall. "Next year will be even bigger and better," promises Kamienski.

The Near Death of a Space Cadet

Rob Lastine

The mind of a child contains a surprising number of adventures, all that's needed is a little imagination to give those adventures life.

Between 1964 and 1968 my family lived in Virginia Beach, Virginia, only seventeen miles from the ocean.

One of my childhood adventures had to do with the excitement of sailing off into the sunrise in pursuit of a forgotten continent and the monetary gain it would bring to the man with such honorable intentions.

While at the beach with my family, who were enjoying a few hours of relaxing sun and surf, I realized my chance and set out in my small ship. To my surprise, I was actually sailing a sailboat, but to me it was a ship.

Barely 200 yards from shore a voice came to me. Was it divine inspiration or just a person asking if I knew that my quest could be realized? To me, it sounded too familiar to be divine inspiration.

At the haze of make believe I recognized reality.

My father's voice tone indicated that my mission had been aborted; it also meant that I was to return to port as soon as possible.

Upon reaching the safety of my native soil, my father explained the facts of sailing and the many dangers that awaited a sailor foolish enough to imagine an air mattress to be a sea-worthy ocean vessel. I reluctantly promised to postpone my trip.

It was the same time that my brother and I came into possession of a Go-Cart, but, if a boy chose to, it could become a high speed motorized space craft.

Our space vehicle had enough room for only one warrior of sound enough heart to endure its many hidden surprises. One such surprise was the tendency of the throttle to stick in the wide open position, and always at the worst time.

One day the space cadets from the neighborhood were invited to pilot the craft, but not before they were carefully briefed on its controls and orbital limits.

My first two passes through the atmosphere weren't any different from the many missions that had been logged before, so I invited my best friend and neighbor, George, to ride with me while I explained the controls. The only place for him to ride, however, was between the rear mounted engines. Then it happened!

Upon reaching the end of our galaxy, or was it simply the end of our street--no time to separate fact from fiction--the throttle became stuck in the wide open position.

With lightning speed and razor-sharp judgement, the craft was placed in an inter-space 180 degree directional change, but wait, what was that sound coming from the back of my space craft? A definite yell was easily heard over the scream of the twin rocket boosters under full throttle. A quick glance to the rear of the craft answered the question which lightning speed and razor-sharp judgement had overlooked.

My comrade, space cadet George, who was riding between the rocket boosters had been jettisoned in the maneuver and appeared to be suffering from the frictional build up of earth's asphalt atmosphere.

With the craft's newly acquired agility, due to a lighter payload, its speed increased. Alone through the galaxy I plunged.

Suddenly, up ahead, there came into view an asteroid field, constructed by my fellow space cadets. They seemed to feel that my turn was over; I was, however, unable to communicate to them the gravity of the situation I now found myself in, and the distance between us was closing rapidly.

The cadets, mounted on fancy earth machines called bicycles, had placed themselves in the path of my jeting cadet. This craft's genius was my soon-to-be-angry big brothers, for Don's bicycle and that of another cadet were chosen as the weakest links in the asteroid chain.

Soon their shouts, along with their newly disassembled bicycles, were forgotten as I encountered my new menace: cross traffic.

The craft was skillfully maneuvered, by a new desperate cadet, into the largest bush that came into view after jumping the curb and re-entering earth's orbit. The engines stalled, and my grip on the wheel relaxed.

Later the space craft was returned to base for repairs. Waiting for me was a somewhat ill-tempered brother and a limping best friend.

I was de-briefed on the day's flight as base commanders Jerry and Allene, my parents, looked on in concern at my inter - space traveler as he related the tale of the mission with its near-death experience and the multi-colored flash-back of the cadet's short interplanetary life.

Sixteen years separate that story from present day reality. In that time many space travelers have taken place with varying degrees of success.

It appears that the only limits to our adventures are those we put up to defend ourselves from the unknown recesses of our minds. Imagine the possibilities that exist for those intrepid enough to experience their dreams.

After all, isn't an adult simply a child that got taller?

Collegedale Gets New Pastor

The Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church has recently informed the Adventists of an expansion in its pastoral staff. Elder Ed Wright, associate pastor of the Fresno Central Church in California, has received an invitation to join the newly-created post of Pastor of Family Ministries at the campus church.

Pastor Wright will be coming to us after having completed eight years of service as Pastor of Youth and Family Ministries to his large (1,500 member) congregation in central California. Prior to this tenure, he attended Andrews University, completing both his undergraduate studies and Masters of Divinity training there.

Pastor Wright will have many responsibilities at the Collegedale Church although all of them relate closely to the concept of family ministry. He will be leading out in the Family Life Committee (established for the benefit of young married couples), operating a program of visitation to non-attending church members, developing small Bible study groups, and doing a lot of communications and public relations work.

The necessity to hire a new pastor actually arose two years ago when Elder Bruce Aalborg, one of Collegedale’s assistant pastors, accepted a call to pastor the Knoxville church. His departure left a void in the pastoral staff, which only now has been filled.

The delay in-filling the position was a result of the financial situation the Georgia-Cumberland Conference found itself in during the last two years. With the national economic situation looking in dire straits, a decrease in tithe income, and the Davenport crisis still an issue, the conference was forced to do some retrenchment. Although a church as large as Collegedale requires a staff of about five pastors to cover all the areas of ministry at a college campus of the size, it too has had to cut back on its staff. However, this conference’s financial picture has brightened in the last year (see box). Elder Wright’s acceptance to come to Collegedale now allows the other members of the pastoral staff—Gordon Bietz, Rolland Rof, Jim Herman, and Gerald Morgan—to concentrate on their respective areas of ministry.

Although the exact date of Elder Wright’s arrival on campus is not yet known, we can expect his ministry to begin around the first part of January. Joining the new pastor in his ministry will be his wife and two young boys, Elder Gordon Bietz, Senior Pastor of the Collegedale church, comments, “We are eagerly anticipating his coming. Elder Wright’s presence on the pastoral staff will enhance our program by allowing us to provide a more comprehensive and complete ministry to the church and to the community.

GCC Looking Up

Financially, the Georgia-Cumberland Conference has done very well this year. Problems that have plagued this conference and that have caused it to cut back on staff are slowly being resolved. As of July 31, 1984, the tithe income has increased 1.2 percent from last year.

Financial resolutions of the Davenport crisis are continually being made. Currently, the conference has been awarded, in cash, $550,000 by the arbitration steering committee formed.

Scandiafestival ‘84 Troupe to Perform at SC

Acrobats from Denmark, gymnasts from Sweden, and an entertainer from Norway will be performing on Sunday evening, September 23, 7:30 p.m. at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Scandiafestival ‘84, second program in the Artist-Adventure Series at Southern College, will take place in the Physical Education Center on the Collegedale campus.

Members of Scandiafestival ‘84 were selected through competitions in Scandinavia. “They are champions of their disciplines,” according to Everett Schlisner, coordinator for the 18 events in the Artist-Adventure Series at Southern College.

A team of 24 Danish Flying Acrobats, ranging in age from 10 to 22, are a part of the group. The Flying Acrobats of Aarhus formed in 1970, and now several hundred boys and girls compete in the select group of show-gymnasts. Their performance features vaulting, tumbling and trampoline acrobatics, as well as singing and folklore dancing, backed up with classical and contemporary music and lighting effects. The gymnasts train six to eight hours a week and do required exercises at home as well.

Team members have made 29 foreign trips, and have achieved superior status in their own country with about 40 performances in Denmark annually. In 1982 they won the International Gymnastics Competition in West Germany, upsetting the Japanese team which had dominated the event for a number of years.

A second distinct group participating in the Scandiafestival ’84 is the Stockholmflickorna, a gymnastic association of girls from Stockholm, Sweden. The girls begin training for the display team as early as age 5, working with a ball to develop speed, adroitness, precision, and tempo.

The third group is Rytmugbarna, or the Rhythm Guys, a cross-section of teachers, buschers, carpenters, shipyard workers, and farmers from Gothenburg, Sweden. “Their age averages about 22,” yet they are known for their high-tempo gymnastic routines,” states Schlisner.

Vocal highlights of Scandiafestival ’84 include The Northern Lights, a Danish quartet; and “Britt,” a folksinger. The first-prize winner of the Norwegian Young Superstar contest, held in July to choose Norway’s best young entertainer, also stars in Scandiafestival ’84.

Tickets for the program will be available at the door: $3 for adults, $2 for senior citizens and children under 12, or $7.50 per family. Students with I.D. admitted free.

Brock Hall to Open Soon

Lori Selby

Although it seems as if most of the Southern College campus has just gotten into the swing of school, many of our departments are planning changes. With several weeks the Communications, English, History, Foreign Languages, Art, Business and Office Administration departments will be moving into Brock Hall, the new humanities building. They will be followed by the Audio visual department and by the radio station, FM 90.5-WSCM.

Brock Hall, on the north side of campus just off Aphon Pike, will join Wood Music Building as part of our new fine arts complex.

Dr. Robert Morrison, Chairman of the Division of Arts and Letters, commented that he will be glad to finally have all his departments (Communications, English, History, Foreign Languages and Art) under one roof. According to Dr. Morrison, some of the special features of the new building include office space with rooms for readers between each office, humanities classrooms adjoining an audiovisual room with mini-windows into the classrooms for film and slide projector, and two rooms designed for a language lab. He mentioned plans for a word processor for journalism and English students.

The Art facilities include a large ceramics classroom with a kiln and adequate electricity to the pottery wheels. There will also be classrooms for drawing and design. Close to the Art department is a gallery complete with track lighting in the ceiling. Dr. Morrison explained Excuse Me, Please...

"You may pick up this order at the catalog desk," the lady said as she handed me my receipt. I followed her directions to the showroom and moved to the counter under the sign "Pick Up." The delivery boy stepped to the counter, so I handed him my receipt. It was at this time that I noticed a burly man in overall come over to the counter on my left. He addressed the delivery boy with not the slightest of injurements as he said, "I think I'm first young man." The boy looked up surprised as the man continued, "Yeah, you, you little snob." At this time the customers around became quite tuned in to the drama which was unfolding. I was quite aware that the man had left the spot in line, although I had stepped to the counter. The delivery boy, not really knowing what he was supposed to do in a situation like this, leaned my merchandise into the car. I drove away curious as to how the boy would fare with the irate customer.

This event, although very real, might be a little extreme to what we encounter in an everyday situation, but it is repeated over and over, albeit often on a much smaller scale. What really alarms me is when I see these scenes being played out on the campus of Southern College. By coming to this school we are taking on the responsibility of living under the terms of its name. We have come here to be part of an "extended family" in the broadest use of the definition. Everyone that lives here has accepted the challenge to be a reflection of this institution. But the responsibility doesn't end there! We not only have the responsibility to emit the philosophy of this school but we also have a dual purpose to emit the characteristics of a Seventh-day Adventist, and part of that includes being courteous. If we are not willing to live by the principles of the family, how can we expect the family to treat us like one of its members? The more visible types of courtesy are usually the easiest to come by (things like opening doors, verbal recognition, and picking up dropped books), but the invisible, the less praised incidents of courtesy, often seem to come few and far between, and yet I believe that these are the gestures that really count. This type of courtesy is seen by many people as being inconspicuous, yet it is the type that is most noticed by our peers. How many times have we seen someone moving in the presence of our peers and yet have moved quickly to the side? This type of courtesy is better than the obvious type. It is the type of courtesy that is seen by others.

Courtesy comes in many different forms, words, and actions. Southern College is a Christian school which has Christian ideals for its members. Thus, by the mere fact that we have come to this school it shows people that we are willing to take on the responsibility of reflecting its true character. So the next time you are trying to cut your way through a line, remember to say, "Excuse me, please."

Looking Up...

by the General Conference to work on retrieving and distributing funds. It expects to receive at least that much or more by the same committee later on in the year. The conference also has sold three buildings—a post office in Parker, Arizona, and two telephone company buildings in California and have netted $1,000,000. Still to be settled are claims from bankruptcy court.

Letters... WE'RE TALKIN' PROUD!

Dear Editor:
I would like to express my appreciation to the residence halls, Dean Schlirn, and the other faculty members who were instrumental in the worship and chapel changes. I feel this action shows that they are committed to being reasonable and fair to the students. May this be a precedent of Faculty-student relations for the years to come. Cooperation and understanding on the part of both the students and faculty will help make this school year more rewarding and enjoyable for all.

Sincerely,
Michael Patigrove

The Links of the Chain

Rob Lastine

I had been walking through this small fishing village for some time now, but I still wasn't quite sure what is was that had drawn me to it. Perhaps it was to escape the heat or just to break the monotony of California's Highway 5; no matter, I was here now, and it was a welcomed change.

I had left my Honda GL-1000 at the edge of town under a shade tree, and, now, after being here awhile, I turned and started back toward where my motorcycle was parked.

All morning I had been riding. In fact this was the 11th day of what had been my dream vacation. For six years I had attended Southern College in Collegedale, Tennessee, and, now, after having graduated with my degrees, I could do the one thing my college curriculum, as it was, and my 43-hour-a-week work schedule had not left me much time to do—take my dream vacation by motorcycle. As I watched the fishermen returning from their labor with their catch and hanging their nets up to dry, I realized how late it was getting and walked a little faster.

The sun was slipping further toward the west now, and as it did, the smell of salt air, carried by the light breeze off the Pacific Ocean, helped me make my decision to leave even more difficult. This village was a peaceful place, and I really didn't want to leave, but had to.

While walking back to my motorcycle I realized that this was a perfect vacation, a dream come true.

In the 11 days that I had traveled, the weather was near perfect. The only rain that did fall was mostly at night while I was dry in my tent or during the heat of the day when it was a welcomed relief to my sun-dried skin.

Thousands of miles had been measured off by my motorcycle's odometer. The beauties of nature were many: from the Mid-Western Plain states to the majestic Rocky Mountains of Colorado, from the vastness of the Grand Canyon in Arizona to the overwhelming depth and beauty of Zion National Park in south-western Utah. The solitude of Highway 50 in Nevada was also a welcomed change to the overcrowded cities and towns along the way. I sat down on a park bench, just for a moment, to reflect back on the days events.

Just this morning I had left Paradise, California, where I stayed with relatives last night. Los Angeles was to be my day's destination, and by the map, Highway 5 seemed to offer the quickest route. However, by mid-morning the temperature had risen to 96 degrees, and the traffic was unnecessarily heavy. I knew there had to be a better way so I pulled off to the side of the interstate where, in the shade of an overpass, I looked at my map.

Now, here on this park bench, in the coolness of this peaceful village, it came to me—the reason I liked California Highway 1. But of all the villages and towns along the coast, why had I stopped at this one? As I stood up from where I had been sitting, that question turned over in my mind.

All the fishing vessels were anchored in the harbor now and the village was settling down for the night, so I hurried on through town.

As I was passing a small shop, something on the counter caught my eye. I turned and walked up the open door into the shop.

The object that had diverted my attention was a chain, like one I had ever seen. Each link had a unique shape and size. As I walked closer, I noticed a man behind the counter.

"May I help you young man?" he said. My eyes dropped from the merchant to the chain on the counter top.

"Sir, that is an interesting chain you have there," I said. "Did you make it yourself?"

"Yes," came his reply. "Many years ago I made this chain to remind my children of my love for them. I put it out here, on top of the counter, where all can see it and appreciate its value. It's priceless, you know!"

A lump grew in my throat. I could not afford this chain, but perhaps I could find out more about its designer.

"How many children do you have?" I asked.

"It's hard to say, young man," came his reply, as his gaze shifted from me to the people passing by on the sidewalk in front of his shop.

"They stop in from time to time," he continued, "or they call or send letters."

His eyes fell on mine as he went on. "My children mean the world to me. There is nothing my father and I wouldn't do for them. That's why I made this chain, so they would see the love we have for them."

Before I could ask my next question, the white-haired man lifted the chain from atop the counter, and holding it by its largest link, he let it hang down.

"You see," he said, "I am a fisherman, or perhaps I should say, I'm a fisher of men."

My curiosity about what this bronze-skinned man had just said was building up inside me.

"A fisher of men," I exclaimed, repeating the words he had just spoken.

"Yes son, I cast out my net and those who freely enter are then drawn up to where I would have them be, with me, here, just as you are now."

"What do you mean?" I asked in a trembling voice. "I walked into you're store to admire that chain on the counter; that's all!" The gentleman smiled at me and asked, "What is it about the chain that drew you to it?"

"The intricate beauty and uniqueness of each link," I responded, "and the careful attention to detail that the craftsman used in its forming, that's why I came in, just to look at it."

"Wouldn't you like to have it? Here it's yours."

I could barely believe my ears; this was what I had been searching for ever since re-reading the story, Links of the Chain, the story of a craftsman's love for his children and his building of a chain for each to have as a reminder of his love for them. Could this be the man of whom so much had been written? When I could speak again, I replied, "Sir, I would love to possess such a chain, but I have nothing to offer in return for such a priceless work."

"But, it's yours; here, I give it to you because you have been searching for its strength all your life. Take care of it and it will last forever."

My mind raced with excitement. "Oh, yes sir, it will hold a place of honor in my house, and it will be preserved."

I waited to know more about the chain which this man had created. "Would you tell me which link is most important; they must stand for something."

He lifted it from its place on the counter, and as He did, the light struck it in such a way that I could see words that I had not noticed before etched on each link.

"The reason I asked," I continued, "was because I noticed the different link sizes."

"They are all important," he said, "the size and shape do not effect the chains strength for they are each as important as the others along with the words which are engraved on them. The words are the most important part of this chain. But to answer your question, one link were to be weakened the chain would break, and a chain is only as strong as its weakest link. That is why you must not let one of these 10 links become weakened by rust. Don't score this chain on a shelf or in a glass case. Use it, for its metal becomes stronger with use."

As he lowered the chain to the counter I couldn't help but ask another question.

"Sir, I noticed the words as continued on p. 8

What School is this?

I came here in '82
To a school whose name I thought I knew
Then the Big Thing in '83
Was renaming good old S.M.C.
And now again in '84
Petitions float around once more
What I'm wondering is, in '85
Will we be finished with this changing jive
Let's pick a name and let it stay
So when friends ask me to what school I go
I won't have to hang my head and say...
"I don't know."
You Can Call Me JT

Monty Gennick

Who is JT? Jook Ting Shim is the president of this year's student association. Last year he came into the office with a slim margin over his opposing candidate, Denise Read. There are some who speculate that his desire for the office came out of a quest for power rather than good intent.

In defense of himself JT stated that he feels active elections are important. "How could I encourage others to run on their qualifications while refusing to run on my own?" he asked. "Also, if you want to have a say in how matters should be done you need to be involved." JT does seem to be an advocate of the "get involved" action he recommends. During his years at Southern he has served two-year terms as a senator and edited four editions of SC's telephone directory, The Numerique.

Last year he served as vice-president of SA, an office which he ran for in three straight elections. "If something is worth it," he commented, "don't be afraid to alter strategies—just never give up."

JT attributes his win in the spring of '83 to a well-structured campaign that "pulled out all the stops." From office of vice-president, JT went on to be president in a very similar campaign.

Aside from these major offices, JT has also involved himself in various campus organizations such as the Amateur Radio Club and the student chapter of IABC.

As president of the student association, JT acknowledges his load of responsibility yet feels that his qualifications can meet them. Although he

My classes are very interesting. I teach levels 1, 2, and 3 Bible classes. Also, I do private tutoring. My students are eager to learn English. They always ask me questions about myself and America. My students like to bring little gifts to me. They say that they like me as a teacher. They laugh with me when I try to pronounce their names. We have a Friday night vesper at our house and now we have about 12 people coming. We are encouraging the students to come. I have really enjoyed it here so far. I know I will be able to help the Thai people. They are very friendly to me. I think God for making it possible for me to be here. I pray that I will be able to do all I can as a Christian friend and teacher. Please pray for me. Also, it would be nice to get a letter from you once in a while. I like to hear what's up in the States.

I love the Orient and I loved our orientation in Seoul, Korea. We couldn't have had a better speaker who was more uplifting than Richard Barron. I enjoyed all the singing we did together too. After I got to Had Yai with three friends, Jerry, Mark, and Lori. We also found out that they were having problems with our work permits and that we might have to stay a couple of months in Bangkok. We didn't want that, so the four of us really began praying and formed prayer bands. Everyone said that it would be impossible but on Tuesday the 26th we left Bangkok for Hat Yai by train and arrived on the 27th, thanks to God's answer to all our prayers. By the end of our first week we had registered 260 students. I love Thailand and am glad I came. Hi Mom, Dad, Tammy, and Fluffy (my animal).

Gano Achieves Highest MCAT at Southern College

Ron Aquilina

The MCAT is very familiar to those aspiring medical professions. The Medical College Admissions Test score is used as acceptance criteria for those entering medical school. With this in mind medical students prepare themselves to take the MCAT. This is where David Gano comes in. David tackled the MCAT, and he tackled it with style. David Gano now holds the all-time high score on the MCAT here at Southern College with a score of 75. This beat the record previously held at 72 by Peony Doerkson. With this score David has assured himself acceptance to any medical school. To give an idea of how well David did, one should know that Harvard University's MCAT acceptance score is 65.

David Gano was born in Gainsville, Florida on November 7, 1963. He attended Forest Lake Academy, where he graduated from in 1981. Then he came here to Southern College as a chemistry major. Although he always strove for academic success, he was never obsessed by grades. Aside from his academics, David was always involved in extra-curricular activities. He has been in Die Meister Singers and on the gymnastic team as an acrobatic clown for three years. He toured as part of a quartet to various area churches and also involved himself in intramurals.

Last summer David worked as the Waterfront Director at Camp Kulqua. He is now currently in Panama, Marshall Islands, as a student missionary and is planning to enroll at Loma Linda University next fall.

Those who know Dave say they know him to be a well-rounded, easy going, spiritually-oriented guy with a great sense of humor. It's great to know that there are students, such as Dave, that show excellence in Christian education and commitment to Christian goals and standards at Southern College. The Southern Accent congratulates Dave for his efforts!
Martin and His Message

Norman Hobbs
Southern College is proud to have Elder Doug Martin as its guest speaker during this week of spiritual emphasis. Elder Martin was born in South Dakota and attended Madison Academy for his secondary education. He received his college training from Kentucky, Newbold, and graduated from Southern College in 1975. Doug and Jeri, have spent four dedicated years as student missionaries in Indonesia. Doug and Jeri have four children: two seven-year-old sons adopted in Indonesia, a four-year-old son born in Florida, and a six-month-old daughter born in Ohio this year. Elder Martin is currently teaching Bible classes at Spring Valley Academy in Dayton, Ohio.

The Week of Prayer theme is "How to Get on Track." Monday night was the first meeting of this week of spiritual emphasis, and during the meeting Elder Martin told some humorous incidents which had happened to him. He talked about his "light-blue waffle iron" and thanks to his joking description of an Indonesian hospital, everyone who attended the meeting now knows where Garfield is from. Turning from the light side, Martin told about a serious accident in which he was involved, but he came to the conclusion that God had put him in the right place at the right time. Drawing parallels from his stories and Bible references, such as Isaiah 44:3, 65:24, Jeremiah 29:11, and John 9, Elder Martin expressed that the "solution came before the problem." The Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world. "The care to our problems, the Messiah," Elder Martin stated, "has always been and always will be."

With this omnipotent cure, we can 'get on with salvation' as we wait on our returning Saviour." Elder Martin explained, "He (Jesus) is the one who came to us by His own choice, yet was sent at the fullness of time. Now is the time we must come to Him! We can have the best for free! By accepting Christ, we change from ordinary to extraordinary." Elder Martin ended Monday's service by calling "ordinary people to come to the Lord and to start a homeward journey."

A Tomboy's Advantage

Campus Digest News Service
Women who were tomboys when they were younger are more likely to become independent, high-powered professionals, according to a recent study of 125 middle-class women by University of Kansas psychologist Elisabeth Metzler-Brennan.

Remaining assertive seems to come easier to women who started out free of sexual stigmas associated with more traditionally feminine attitudes, who chose homemaking or traditionally feminine professions later.
Sports Corner Commentary

J. Randolph Thuesee

This was certainly unexpected. At least someone could have forewarned me. Even if someone had thought it, I probably wouldn't have believed a word. All of a sudden, my whole world has changed. Can it be that, after all these years, the Chicago Cubs are finally going to win the National League's Eastern Division? What happened to tradition? What happened to the "May Fades," the "June Swoon?" the "July Slide?" the "August Bust?" the "September Fall?!" We're running out of time here. If the Cubs are going to die down, who would I have to tell me?

"Accident" Editor Dennis Negron would be glad to do that honor. He's a Mets fan.

But surely, I must be dreaming. Are these the same guys who 38 years sang "Wait till next year" every year and even had a copyright? They can't be.

The guys I'm used to seeing are those who bobble the ball on the potential last out of the game only to see the tying run score. The guys I'm used to are the ones who hit pop-ups with the bases loaded and no one out three consecutive times. The guys I'm used to are the ones who can't catch pop-ups hit by their opponents.

Who are these 1984 impostors? They just can't be the Cubs! The guys I'm used to are the ones who are stepping stones for other teams on the way to the division crown, the guys who score 22 runs and still lose because the other guys scored 23, the guys who star on the "blues" segment of "This Week in Baseball," the guys whose manager cutes out the fans for coming out to the games just to boo the Cubs for they had just blown yet another one. You should have heard that tape. I never knew such words were in the English language.) Those guys, I remember them well.

But these guys today are beginning to be called "America's Team," partly because of Super Station WXST TV Chicago and partly because of all the migrated players on the team—which is one why Dallas Green, formerly of the Philadelphia organization, is looking like a genius. This year is a case in point. In January, Green looked at his stack of cards for the upcoming season. He was unimpressed, to say the least. His top starting pitcher of 1983 was Chuck Rainey. Green went out and acquired Scott Sanderson from the Montreal Expos and traded away Carmelo Martinez to San Diego. Immediately, people began to remind Green of the infamous Lou Brock trade of years gone by. The guy they got was out of baseball in less than a year and we all knew what happened to that poor catoff, Mr. Brock.

Green at his outfield and was confused. He had a first baseman playing center field in Leon Durham and a left-handed right fielder who couldn't hit left-handed pitching in Mel Hall. He also had a left fielder who was inconsistent in Jay Johnstone. So what did he do? He traded reliever Bill Campbell to Philly for Gary Matthews and Bob Der- nier, a real center-fielder. This caused friction, obviously. Durham was moved to first base to push popular veteran Bill Buckner to the oak. Matthews was inserted in left to push Johnstone to Buckner's side, and Hall was later traded to Cleveland—otherwise known as major league baseball's purgatory—for Rick Sutcliffe, George Frazier, and Ron Hassey. Buckner had been traded to Boston for Dennis Eckersley by this time. He acquired Richie Hebner as a free agent and hired Jim Frey (1980 Kansas City Royals) to be his manager. He swore that he would make Cub fans happy by producing a winning ballclub. Cub fans had been conditioned to losing so long that the only winner they ever had was the 1969 team managed by Leo Durocher that held the team in first place for the majority of the season until the Miracle Mets washed all those dreams away. Cub fans were skeptical about Green's daring dealing. "What is he doing?", they'd say. He's trying to bring a winner. "They'll never be as good as the '69 club." 1969 is gone. But what happened to Don Kessinger, Glen Beckert, Raul- dy Hundley, Jim Hickman, Billy Williams, and Fergie Jenkins? Who?

Who knew? Milt Pappas, Ken Holtzman, Vic Harris, Dave Kingman, Steve Ontiveros, and Larry Gura? You must be kidding.

"O.K., O.K., Ernie Banks." Never heard of him... Wait a minute, is he kin to Ernie Pfeifer? But anyway all those old Cubs were in the World Series. That fact is older than Dean Quadeley Roman. Had it that if the Cubs were ever to get close again, America would have to win another war. They thought it had it in 1969, but just like the Vietnam war, they were beaten by those communists, the New York Mets. This year the com- mimes were at it again, trying to spoil the Cub's fun. The Mets themselves had a very good year led by Keith Hernandez and Dwight Gooden, the rookie sensation on the mound. But in head-to-head competition, the Cubs won nine of the last 13 games. Other than head-to- head competition, the Mets and the Cubs played pretty even this year. Usually that means fifth and sixth place in the N.L. East. But this year they are 1-2 and it is definitely not a fluke. So, what I picked them to finish fifth and sixth in last March's issue? For that matter, who cares that I went 0-4 in my preseason predictions? Baltimore, the Chicago White Sox, the Montreal Expos, and the Braves all let me down. I told you it wasn't gospel, but my boss is making me feel like Bolwinkle when he said, "Hey Rocky, watch me try to pull a rabbit out of my hat!"

Rocky: "Again?"

Bolwinkle: "Ninich's up ma sleevee... Presto!!!"

Nothing.

Recently my old friend, Dr. Alexander Slop, took me on a guided tour through a building that contained an experiment dubbed "Project Matrimony."

"It seems," Slop told me, "that more and more young people are finding it convenient to forget about having a straight line of living together instead. The purpose of this experiment is to find ways to re-establish the old marriage bonds and see if the 'American hitch' can once again become the rule rather than the exception."

We began the tour by looking in through the door of the first room where secretaries were pouring over books and dictions of every sort.

"What's going on in there?"

I wanted to know.

"This," Dr. Slop replied, "is our 'sweet-nothings' room. It is here where we find romantic things for young men and women to say to each other. By teaching these meaningless heart thumps to prune marriage prospects throughout the country, we expect to see a definite increase in weddings."

"Great gaggling gizzards!" I cried when I entered in the door of the next room. "What's going on in there?"

Slop laughed at my reaction.

"This, my friend, is where we teach young men the true art of kissing. If our theory is correct, the ladies will be so flustered after being smooched by one of our students that they'll say 'yes' to anything, including a marriage proposal." I headed through the door for a quick lesson, but Slop caught my arm.

"We must continue our tour," he lectured, "and besides, you don't have full security clearance."

As we continued down the hall, we were passed by a distinguished-looking gentleman with horns and a tail.

"Who is that man in the funny red outfit?" I whispered to my friend.

"That," Slop chuckled, "is Cupid, the project's director."

"What does he do during this time?" I thought that Cupid was a naked little baby that had wings and carried a bow and arrow—not a pitchfork!

After laughing uncontrollably for almost two minutes, embarrassing me completely, Dr. Slop exclaimed that he was "quite surprised and much amused" to find that I believed in such fairy-tale hogwash.

Attempting to change the subject, I asked why the next room was full of people talking on telephones.

"This is where we contact all the young men who are preparing to go to college," Slop replied, a smirk still on his face. "Salesmen are on the phones trying to convince these fellows to become theology majors."

"We're trying to do more than baffle the student with tales of surprises. Before I could even ask the meaning of this, my tour guide was speaking again.

"You see, in order to better their chances of getting called to a church, a prospective minister needs to get married. What better way to increase the numbers of preachers?"

"What could I say? These people had thought of everything."

The tour has not yet completed. Chemists were busy working with sophisticated-looking equipment in the next room. Dr. Slop explained that they were trying to find a formula that would get the body chemistry running at a faster pace and hopefully would encourage matrimony. "We've just had a breakthrough," he explained. "Now it's simply a matter of putting the potion in -to pills that look like little green M & M's."

"Everything I've seen today has been quite thrilling and very surprising, to say the least," I commented at the end of the tour. "Project Matrimony" is completed.

Further to incorporate the project into a full-fledged business, Slop said thoughtfully, "We're just waiting to get all the bugs out."

"What are you going to call the business?" I wanted to know.

"We've thought about that," the good doctor replied. "The board of directors has just settled on a reasonable and simple name—Southern Missonary College."

Schools: Discipline Discussed Nationwide

Campus Digest News Service

What are parents of school-age children concerned about most? According to recent opinion polls, the answer is discipline in the schools.

As part of its increased emphasis on school discipline, the Reagan administration is considering amendments to a federal law that would overturn a 1975 U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

Officials in the White House and justice department, as well as Secretary of Education Terrell Bell, agree that schoolteachers' ability to deal with misbehavior was greatly impaired by the 1975 Wood vs. Strickland case, in which four girls were suspended for spiking a school punch bowl with beer.

The girls' legal rights had been violated, said the Supreme Court, and the school officials, as individuals, were liable for lawsuits because the students were not given due process before their suspension.

Largely because of that case and its out-of-hand-tied effects, a two-tiered political effort by the justice and education departments is underway to put power back in the hands of school officials.

The administration is now considering application of a "good-faith" test to potential suits filed by students against school officials; proof of malice would be required before damages could be collected.

In a related case, the administration will submit a brief to expand disciplinary powers over students engaged in drug push- ing or unruly students.

The additional effort will not be an additional cost to the administration, but it's clear that more money is needed to improve schools.

Sufficient funds have already been a problem for schools like Chicago's Providence-St. Mel High School. The school was almost closed in 1978 by the Chicago Archdiocese, but principal Paul Adams bought the 56-year-old school on the West Side.

A fund-raising drive with President Ronald Reagan as honorary chairman has been organized, and so far, $1.7 million has been collected for capital improvements and to help students with $1,200-a-year tuition.

Last year, 100 percent of St. Mel's graduates went on to college. Discipline is the main difference at the school, Adams says. Besides strict discipline during the day (such as automatic suspension for skipping class), students do three hours of homework at night.

The increased government action to strengthen school officials' punishment powers is spurred by a recent White House study entitled "Discord In Our Public Schools," which uncovered some legal obstacles standing in the way of effective school discipline.
The Florence Oliver Anderson Nursing Service presents Dorothy McNulty in "The Nurse's Role in Home Health Care" during the chapel period, September 25, in Thatcher Hall. As DRG becomes effective, hospitals are looking to home-health care for patient services. Ms. McNulty shares this concern.

For anyone interested in attending UT at Memphis, several health professionals from that school will be here to discuss Allied Health on September 25. They will meet with interested students in the cafeteria banquet room at 12:00 noon. Advisors will be able to help you with questions on specific health fields.

Organ Is On Its Way

Melanie Boyd

For six years Southern College and the Collegedale community have been eagerly awaiting the arrival of the Brombaugh organ. In 1978 the parts were drawn up and signed for purchasing the $200,000 organ, and now it is on its way to Southern College, coming to us from Eugene, Oregon, disassembled on a 65-foot trailer truck.

In the weeks to follow its arrival, John Brombaugh, the designer and builder of the organ, is sending his craftsmen to spend about five to eight weeks putting it all together in the sanctuary of our campus church. Afterwards, each Sabbath we can expect to hear the pipes that have been voiced the previous week by John Brombaugh. It will take him six to nine months to individually hand-craft pipes and ensure a perfect, overall sound, which will acoustically accommodate the needs of our sanctuary.

Opus 26, the name of the organ, is probably the largest "Tracker" pipe organ in North America. It contains approximately 5,000 pipes, each individually hand-crafted and voiced. Every detail of the organ is made by hand—the pipes, the keyboard, the thin strips of wood—called "Trackers"—which connect key to pipe valve, and even the beautiful wooden oak case that holds all the pipes and mechanisms together.

Many have wondered why we should spend so much money on an organ when we can purchase another for so much less. The main reason is that it is so much more sensible to buy an organ that will last for hundreds of years and still keep up the quality sound. Opus 26 won't be cut out in twenty years like so many electronic organs will because it has the ability to last up to 300 years. Plus the new organ will pose as an investment as the years go by; the value will increase.

Also, the organ is boosting public relations for S.C., in that organists from all over the U.S. and Europe will be coming to play and hear this fantastic instrument. Mrs. Judy Glass, Associate Professor of Music at S.C., says that everyone will be able to hear a distinct difference in the Brombaugh organ as compared to the sound of the electronic organ currently being used. "It really makes music!" she says.

New Orleans: Ready for Us

There is more than enough hotel space and seating for anyone planning to attend the 44th General Conference Session in New Orleans next June 27 through July 16, according to information released by General Conference assistant treasurer Don Robinson, session manager.

The site of the session—the Superdome—covers 52 acres and seats up to 95,000 people. A view of New Orleans has thousands of available hotel rooms.

All official delegates to the session and their support staffs will be advised through their employing organizations concerning travel and room reservations. Visitors may make their own reservations directly with hotels in New Orleans or through Travelite Company, the official travel agency for the G.C. Session, at 541 Lincoln Road, Miami Beach, FL 33139 USA. The company's telephone numbers are (305) 672-0880 and the toll free (800) 327-8338. The Telex numbers are 441552 and 490728. Without cost to the church, Travelite has negotiated favorable rates with hotels in a variety of price ranges and various distances from the Superdome.

Travelite will handle computerized registration for all delegates and visitors and will provide a "Find a Friend" service indicating where all registrants are staying in New Orleans.

Those interested in camping in the area should contact the Greater New Orleans Tourist and Convention Commission, 334 Royal St., New Orleans, LA 70116, for a list of campgrounds. The telephone number of the commission is (504) 566-5011.

The daily program of the session will begin at 7:45 a.m. with music and devotions, followed by a business session from 9:30 to noon. "Window on the World" (a film program showing Adventist world work) and session committees begin at 1:30 p.m., after which business sessions meet from 3:15 to 5:15.

Evening programs will feature reports of the work of the world divisions of the church. The evening schedule is as follows: Sabbath, June 29, Northern Europe and North America; Sunday, June 30, Euro-Africa and South America; Monday, July 1, Africa-Indian Ocean and Far East; Tuesday, July 2, Southern Asia and Australian; Wednesday, July 3, China/USSR and East Africa; and Thursday, July 4, Middle East/South Africa and Inter-America.

Sabbath, June 29, will feature a "Festival of Praise" and "Strategy 90" at 2 p.m. The Mission Pageant, a highlight of the session, will be on the schedule.

The Joker is Not a Joke

The Joker, student directory of Southern College, which is published by the Student Association, has not been distributed. Each year during the elections for Student Association offices, candidates for Joker editor almost always pledge to get the directory out in record time. This year, however, people are wondering when they will finally receive it.

From the Information that the Southern Accent has gathered it appears that Joker editor Reg Rice is innocent of causing the delay. When planning to publish the Joker, editor Rice wanted to produce better quality pictures of the students on the Orlando Campus than had been published in previous years. He contracted with Olan Mills to take the pictures, and they promised him they could get the pictures to him in two to three weeks. This would have meant that the pictures would have been delivered the last week in August or the first week in September. We are now in the third week of September, and on the 22nd the pictures arrived.

The College Press is allowing themselves two weeks to print the Joker once they have received all the materials. Reg Rice claims that the Joker staff has been ready for two weeks; therefore, they are on schedule. Thus, the holdup from Olan Mills is the only reason that the publication of the directory has not been completed. From this we can logically deduce that we can look for the Joker to be distributed sometime within the next two to four weeks.

What's in store for the students once they do receive the Joker? There have been several changes made in this year's directory. A third line has been added to the information listed under each picture stating the social status of each individual. Hopefully this will save a person from the embarrassment of asking out a married student to pizza and film in the cafeteria. Another added feature is an even more extensive information list including church, local churches, recreation in Chattanooga, and the surrounding area, campsites, parks, and other informative data. A final revision is found in the quality of the Joker. Editor Rice claims that it has really been upgraded.

Rice says that he apologizes for the delay, but the reasons for the delay were beyond his control. He is positive, however, that everyone will be satisfied with the new Joker when they finally get it. "Just be patient," he says.

How High a Standard?

This past week I was talking to a good friend of mine about the different standards of our church. Specifically, we were relating to each other how there are variant opinions about bike riding on the Sabbath. The person said that she used to ride bike on the Sabbath all the time and that she saw nothing wrong with the practice. I related that I had a hard time seeing myself doing such a thing. Then we came up with a probable reason for our differing views. My friend had been raised in a rural area. A bike ride in this setting can be generally himself and close to nature. While it may be an individual closer to God. In contrast, I grew up in a city where a bike ride generally is a battle with cars, stop lights, and pedestrians. Although the possibility is there, most people do not become close to God in this situation. The conclusion we came to was that our backgrounds dictated how high of a standard we had in this area.

However, this conclusion does not mean that it is right for a person to okay all that he does on the rationale that his background determines his higher or lower standard of morality or religion. In areas that our church has not taken a stand or that the Bible does not have a principle by which we can judge an action as acceptable them, I come to reason that there are levels of standards that are acceptable. Certainly one cannot condemn my friend or me for having variant opinions on bike riding. I am able to see that people who do ride their bikes on the Sabbath can keep the Sabbath just as well as those who take bikes. But I am not ready to follow this course of action. And with the mindset that I have now, I probably would be wrong in doing it.

Seventh-day Adventists are known for their high standards. Some people admire us for them; others think about us as ridiculous for having them. Yet even in our church there are and always will be different levels of standards in areas that our church has not taken a stand. My responsibility, then, in this situation is to respect my fellow man, if, in fact, he has taken the Bible’s dictation that we do whatever is true and pure into account, then he can be judged only by God. I have no right to force him to change nor to judge him as wrong. An action of this sort puts us in the wrong.

IS REAGAN POPULAR?
Dear Editor,

I applaud you for taking an interest in the 1984 presidential elections by publishing the essay on “Why is Reagan’s Campaign?” in your September 13 issue. However, I think the view that Reagan isn’t so popular deserves equal time.

Some of us do not view Reagan as the “Great Communicator” or a “bully president,” but as a master actor who does well at delivering ghost-written speeches, and as a president who is little more than a bully puppet. As a future teacher, I find Reagan’s policies toward education lacking. Not only has he spent the funds for certain programs (bi-lingual classes, for example) cut off, but he has not proposed any new programs for supporting public schools. As pointed out in a recent television documentary, leaving schools to the county and city systems could lead to “two Americas” – one black and one white, one rich and one poor.

Reagan’s ultra-conservative political platform is one I find difficult to support. A broken promise in public schools are moral, personal issues that should not be dictated by any political government. Reagan’s claims to have benefited the American people by not raising taxes. In reality, Reagan’s tax cut helped people making $80,000 a year pay $7,000 less in taxes while those earning $10,000 yearly ended up paying $270 more in taxes. The people paying more were the ones who couldn’t afford it and who also will be affected by the Reagan administration’s cuts to social programs. Reagan’s campaign is being run on his personality and wit (jokes which I don’t find humorous) and not on his ideas. He hasn’t spent much time talking about the issues that face America because he’s too busy trying to sing America to sleep – singing songs about what’s right with America. Reagan may well be a “known celebrity,” but so are Donald Duck and Michael Jackson, and I certainly wouldn’t want either of them as president. I don’t want a celebrity decorating the oval office with his wife and his jelly beans. I want a man who is interested in the issues and who doesn’t need a tele-primer to respond to them. There’s more to the presidency than just a nice smile.

VOTE REPUBLICAN
Dear Editor,

With November 6 only a little more than a month away, it is important for us to weigh the pros and cons of the political party elements. Most people from this school, if they are even reading the paper, probably looked at another article where they read the words political party. It seems that most Adventist youth are not interested in politics, which is another way of saying you don’t care about the past, present, or future and that you would rather float aimlessly through life letting others direct you in your wanderings.

I’m sure that you have heard of the evils of siding with a political party. Well, there are some evils that might help you change your mind. As it was stated in the Chattanooga News Free Press on Sept. 19, 1984, in “State Chief Says Demo Need Help” the Democratic party has adopted a proposal which would “require state Democratic structures to more integrate gays and lesbians into the party network.”

This is a fact that few Adventist are aware of, but it is important to know. How could anyone, unless gay and bi, especially Adventist Christians, vote for a party that is integrating these people into their system. Think about it, register, and vote—Republican.

What Makes Students Mad

Campus Digest News Service

Two psychologists surveyed 200 college students recently, compiling a sort of Top 10 list of pet peeves.

Chris Thurman and Peru Lopez of North Texas State University in Denton present their results in March at the meeting of the American Association for Counseling and Development.

Heading the list: getting a lower grade. Next were having belongings stolen, leaving assignments, filling classes and insufficient parking.

Thurman said that in general, events that students can’t control aggravate them the most.

A Word for You

J. Bruce Ashnon

"Is the beginning was the Word?" In all my ponderings about beginnings or about God, I would never have thought of such a profound statement as John makes. Today's cosmologists are working toward the idea that "in the beginning there was energy"—the strong force, the weak force, the electromagnetic force, and the gravitational force, all blended into one, all exploding into the particles which makes our universe after the big bang triggered the explosion? Where did that concentration of explosive energy come from?

The Christian who accepts that "in the beginning God..." and who reads in his New Testament that God is love, might prefer to think, "Is the beginning was Love," and that it is true. Yet love, in order to find fulfillment, needs someone for whom love can be felt, someone to whom love can be expressed.

Writers' Club Begins The Legacy

Joni King

Have you ever wondered how a few words written by somebody you don't even know can change your life? Just a word, a writer, emotions, and mood? By what process do cold words jump out of a page and leap into our warm feelings? The process is probably complex but the writers in a small book called The Legacy make it seem easy. The Legacy is a compilation of poems, short stories, paintings, and photographs taken from the best writings of Southern College's students. The purpose of The Legacy is to encourage writing across all disciplines from English majors to P.E. or Physical Education majors and give students a chance to have their writings widely read. The book is put in every SDA college and academic library. It also can be bought for $5.00 at the Campus Shop, so fellow students can appreciate the creative art and writing talents of those who had the honor of being included. Some of those in the book last year were Sue Ellen Couch, Gart Curtis, Valerie Dick, Ashton, George Turner, Darwin White, and Donna W nelbert. For those interested in a writing career, The Legacy gives them a chance to show their talents to future job prospects.

The Legacy is a production of the Southern Writer's Club of which Ann Clark and Jan Hulsu, professors of English, are the directors. This club in turn is sponsored by the Division of Arts and Letters. The division chairman, Robert Morrison is a vigorous supporter of this publication.

Switching to Sciences

Campus Digest News Service

In comparing students during the 1976-77 and 1981-82 years, college officials report a shift from humanities to science majors.

Two new surveys of department chairmen, deans and other academic officials have been released by the American Council on Education recently. From these surveys, nearly two-thirds of these humanities officials questioned said the best students were changing to majors in the sciences. Their counterparts in the sciences agreed with the trend.

Employment opportunities—or the lack of them—seem to be to blame for the switch in studies. Slightly over half of these questioned blamed the shift from undergraduate humanities majors on a poor job market, and 21 percent more reported concern of getting a job even after graduate school.

Within the sciences, there was

Garth Thereson

My Fellow Americans, I feel the time has come for me to speak out. For I believe, as many of us believe, that we will, all of us, as we have before and can, and must once again. If we are to be, and make no mistake about it, we cannot afford not to be. For, and let me be perfectly clear about this, in the past few months we have proved beyond any doubt that there are only two reasons for this.

First of all, all is said and done, Ferraro is a vice presidential, not a presidential candidate. A great majority of voters vote on the basis of who leads the ticket, and not on who is the running mate. With the clear decision between Reagan and Mondale, few people will be voting on the differences between Bush and Ferraro.

Secondly, Ferraro is so politically similar to Mondale - both are eastern liberals - that they attract the majority of their support from the same groups. Therefore, there is little attraction in other areas causing hardly any change in the nature of the campaign.

Thirdly, the fact that Ferraro is a woman will not have that great an effect on the campaign. Granted, there are many that will vote for Ferraro just because she is a woman; however, as Elizabeth Dole stated at a recent Republican convention, the majority of women are going to vote based on many major issues other than gender. There also is a great flip side to this issue. A variety of polls have shown that there is a significant, although regrettable, percentage that will vote against Ferraro, solely because she is a woman, and this would tend to cancel the votes of those voting for her because she is one.

In conclusion, although Ferraro's selection is "no big deal" in this fall's campaign, it is a very big deal as far as women's long range political opportunities go. Having taken the first step, she has opened the door of national political opportunity to all Americans. The "Men Only" sign has been torn down for good. Because of her, I see many more women running for high political office, including several candidates from both parties running in 1988, equalizing representation in all the halls of power. Is that a big deal? You bet.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Congress has approved legislation sponsored by Congressman Albert Gore, Jr. (D-Tenn.) that could save consumers who use prescription drugs — particularly the elderly and disabled $1 billion over the next 10 years.

The bill, which is expected to be signed into law, would allow generic drugs to be approved by the Food and Drug Administration and patented at that time. Drugs approved after 1982 cannot be produced by generic drug companies.

“THIS is the most significant consumer drug legislation in 10 years,” said Gore. “The last such attempt to reform the modern health care system was made in the early 1960s by President Sen. Estes Kefauver.”

And they're both represented by the insignia you wear as a member of the Army Nurse Corps. The caduceus on the left means you're part of a health care system in which educational and career advancement are the rule, not the exception. The gold bar on the right means you command respect as an Army officer. If you're earning a BSN, write: Army Nurse Opportunities, P.O. Box 7713, Chifton, NJ 07015.

ARMY NURSE CORPS. BE ALL YOU CAN BE.
Southwestern Adventist College Welcomes New President

Southwestern Adventist College held its breath last spring following the decision of Dr. Donald McAdams to terminate his nine-year term as president of the institution. Under his leadership, the college had experienced much growth and maturity. It was the concern of many that a new president would be found who could continue the direct SAC wisely and positively into the future.

On April 29, Dr. Marvin Anderson was appointed the 21st president of the college. He was the unanimous choice of the ad hoc search committee, and he was unanimously elected by the college board on the first ballot as well. At the time, he was serving as vice president for financial affairs at the college.

Dr. Anderson, 43, has many years of experience at SAC. He was the academic dean and professor for five years, four of which he was chairman of the department. He has served as president of Southwestern Diversified, the college's wholly owned business conglomerate, for eight and a half years. During this time, SDI's revenues have increased from under a million dollars a year to 17 million dollars yearly. Anderson also served as college vice president since 1976. Since that time, the net worth of the college has tripled.

Prior to his employment at SAC, Anderson held many other positions in the educational and business worlds. He taught at Oakwood College, Huntsville, Alabama; Louisiana Tech University, Rustin; the University of Alabama, despite California State College, Deans, Alabama; and Drake Tech, Huntsville. He has also taught courses at Tarrant Community Junior College. Before beginning his teaching career, he worked as a cost accountant for the Univar Corporation and a government purchasing agent for the Rome Arsenal in Fort Rome, Alabama.

Because of his expertise in the field of management, Anderson is frequently called on as a management consultant, and he has spoken extensively throughout the Southwest on management techniques. He is a member of the American Institute of Management and the Western Economics Association of College and University Business Officers. He holds the doctor of business degree from Western Colorado University, Grand Junction.

Reacting to his appointment, Anderson said, "When the board called me in and told me they selected me, I've been part of this college administration for the past nine years, and I'm proud of what we've done. With the Lord's blessing, this college will provide even more young people with great education for lives of service."

Dr. Anderson's duties as president will place him mainly in the role of overseer of the college and in the task of public relations. Much of his work will be focused outside of the college-dealing with alumni and potential contributors to the college. In addition, he will still head up the 400-employee SDI corporation.

Personal concern for the students of the college has withstood the president's recent addresses to the student body. His sensitive and caring treatment of recent crises among the student body have been greatly appreciated. When asked what kind of relationship he wanted with the students on campus, he made it plain that he wanted it to be a very open one. He wants to keep open lines of communication to the students, and he maintains an open door policy. He says, 'There will be no secrets about the operation of the college.' As the president of the student body, Anderson says, 'I would like to think that I was fair, open, and that I helped to put together a small, efficient, high quality college.' May God bless him as he strives to provide this kind of leadership.

Break out the blankets and the hot chocolate; it's time for SC's All Night Softball Tournament! The traditional end to the slowpitch season begins this Saturday night at 7:45 on fields B and C on the opposite side of the College Plaza.

This year there are 13 teams of which five have good chances to win it all. Kent Greve's team entered Wednesday night's action with a 3-0 record. Greve is figured to be this year's top seed. His tandem includes Jim Hakes, power hitting third baseman; Mike Krall, and Dale Turnell. If you remember, Kent Greve's wins include winning the tournament last year's All Night Tournament.

Royce Earp's team has a 4-1 record. Earp is led by co-captain Mike Dickerhoff, Dennis Neigon, and Rob Louto. John Hinkle says that "Earp's team is probably the biggest threat." Dickerhoff thinks that they are the team to beat. "Earp's team, of course," Dickerhoff said when asked who'll win the tournament. What does Earp think? "Either us or Greve. Kent certainly has a strong team."

Other teams with a good chance to come out on top are John Hinkle's team, Mike McClung's team, and Steve Jones'. Hinkle entered Wednesday night's action with a 3-0 record. Led by Kent Boyle, co-captain Greg Cain, Toby Fowler, and Jimmy Crone, Hinkle seems to have the best balance of any team in the East Divisio. Col Soyto of Jeff Jewett's team feels that Hinkle has a good chance to do well. Ron Aguilera of Mike McClung's said "Hinkle's team looks pretty good. They'll be a tough team to beat."

Hinkle is a good leader and that's the number one ingredient needed for the all night affair. It certainly makes a difference, especially about 3:23 a.m.

Mike McClung's team aren't pushovers themselves. After Tuesday's victory over Earp, McClung is now 4-1. Kent Greve feels that McClung "has the firepower but this one pitch thing will kill them."

Coach Jacobs has installed a new rule for the tournament. There will only be one pitch per batter and no walks. Either you swing or you die. Batters will have pitches from their own team pitching to them. Greve feels that very rule will work against most teams with power hitters who look for one particular pitch.

However, David Butler, John Muckewicz, Jeff Stone, and co-captain Ron Aguilera all add punch to McClung's attack. "McClung is the dark horse team," Aguilera says. If any team is worth staying up all night for, these guys are the ones most would watch.

Steve Jones' team features Greg Hoover, Al Travieso, Stan Hohbe, Mark Brambiet, and Scott Begley. Jones entered Wednesday's games at 3-1. Tradition has it that an average team that does fairly decent during the season is usually a team that catches fire during the tournament. "I wouldn't be surprised if some of the average and below teams come up," John Hinkle. Jones' team could fit that bill.

A team that hasn't done that well but could catch fire is Bill Dubois' team. They sure look good on paper, but it just doesn't happen for them on the field. Dubois has a 2-3 record, but Rod Hartle feels that will change come Saturday night.

"I think we have a good team, but right now we just haven't been putting it together. Still, I think it'll be one heck of a tournament." Along with Hartle, otherwise known as the great home run hitter of SC, Dubois boasts Jerry Russell, Rob Shanko, Rob Tuckner, Steve Martin, and Scott Yanklevitz.

Regardless of who comes out on top, this year's tournament will be an exciting one. Come early and get ready to root for your favorite team. Games are scheduled every 45 minutes. After the 7:45 game slot, any following games will be accelerated. For instance, a game could end at 8:15 and instead of waiting for the scheduled 8:30 start for the next game, the game would begin at 8:16.

Refreshments will be sold for a reasonable price to help benefit the gymnastics team. Don't forget the blankets, folks. Believe me, it does get cold around 3:23 a.m. I know from last year. BRRRRRR.

MONDAY

Aguilera 2 Russell 0

Bruce Bishop powered Aguilera past Russell with a 2-0 home run. That gave Aguilera their first run but it proved to be the game winner as Dean Schloeter hit one run along with Russell. The win was Aguilera's 2nd win against 3 losses.

Greve 6 Dubois 3

For this Saturday night's tournament Bill Dubois' team has requested that brown paper be put over the infiel; after all Dubois' team looks great on paper. On Tuesday night they dropped another one to give them a 3 and 3 record. Jim Hakes hit two home runs and had 4 RBIs for the winners. For the losers, it was another bad outing as Dubois' team never really could get on track. It seems that in their last few games the bums have been in the ice box since Dubois has had their problems offensively.

TUESDAY

McClung 10 Earp 4

With the score tied 4-4 with two outs in the bottom of the fourth, Dennis McPeake made a crucial error in the outfield, dropping a ball, which opened the floodgates for 8 runs. The errors put McClung up 10-4, and Earp apparently went all offensive to play afterwards because they managed only two weak hitless bunts for the rest of the game. The game lacked any hitting, with one of the runs being scratched out through weak singles or sacrifice flies.

Music to My Ears

George Turner

A couple of people have asked me lately why I'm not in one of the choirs on campus. Well, I'll admit I do like to sing, and I enjoy music. But I have a problem, see—I don't understand music. Someone once sat me down and made me listen to one of Beethoven's symphonies—the third one in B something-or-other. The whole thing is supposedly built around a triad of chords (is that anything like a pair of cords?) and tells this really intricate story of some sort of hero. Well, I hate to disappoint Mr. B., but after two or three of those triads the whole thing changed from being a hero's tale to being some pretty sharp music. The story may have been there, but they lost me somewhere around Waterpolo.

Of course, it's not just classical music. Have you heard some of the stuff they play on KZ-106? The names of the groups alone are enough to drive you bat-s---little cute names like Steel Breeze, or A Flock of Seagulls—wonderful. And you're seldom 100 percent sure what they're singing about. Like the song a year or two ago by Spandau Ballet: "I know this much is true". How much is true? What are they talking about? Even when I can figure out what the groups are singing about, I still wonder why they are... singing about it, I thought Toto was weird for singing about Africa.

Now country music is different. I'm not saying it's better, just different. In country music I can at least figure out what's going on. The way I understand it, all it takes to be a country music star is have a wife, girlfriend, and a bill. Take, for instance, Hank Williams Jr.'s song "Attitude Adjustment". This guy has got serious problems: his girlfriend calls the cops on him, his wife sits back and lets her brother beat him up, and he's got a best friend that likes to act like Clint Eastwood. With a following like that, I'd go around beating people up, too. I like the song that goes "Mama, he's crazy, crazy over me." But I like the male counterpart better—the one that goes "Mama she's lazy, lazier than me." She must really be lazy because she's too lazy, to even write her own song.

I hate to admit this, but I don't even understand some of the songs in our hymnal. I've got one hymn memorized and yet I still don't know what a "bulwark never failing" is. I've read the Bible from cover to cover and I've never heard anybody called "Lord Sabbath".

You know, I think my favorite song is "Happy Birthday to You"—it may not be much on lyrical content, but at least I know what's going on.

New Orleans...

cond Sabbath, July 6, from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Afternoon programs especially for women are scheduled July 1 to 4. Juniors and Early Teens can attend a day camp for youth June 30 through July 5.

A parade through downtown New Orleans will take place at noon on Friday, June 28.

In addition, various church institutions and departments—plus the world divisions—will set up exhibits in the Superdome. Adventist Health System/EMA has assumed overall responsibility for the Superdome food service operations during the session. It will be directed by Clinton A. Wall, a registered dietitian and Dietary Services Consultant of AHSC/MA.

Meal service at the Superdome will consist of dining service for the noon and evening meals at the top level of the Superdome with eight fast-moving serving lines. The service will provide 10,000 meals per day and more on weekends, making it the largest vegetarian dining service in history. In addition, there will be a limited-service a-la-carte cafeteria, and several concession stands will serve traditional Adventist foods.

Since food supplies must be ordered in advance, the food service for the session will ask delegates to pre-select and pre-purchase tickets for the evening meal (noon meal tickets will be included in the delegate package). Visitors will be asked to pre-select and pre-purchase both noon and evening meals. These planning to attend should watch this publication for future announcements about purchasing meal tickets.

Visitors interested in attending the Ministerial Association's pre-session meetings from Sunday, June 23, through Wednesday, June 26, should watch for registration applications in Ministry magazine beginning in December. To register before December, visitors should write to the Ministerial Association at the General Conference, 6840 Eastern Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20012.

GARFIELD @ by Jim Davis
Bernard J. Berman will be featured at a Suzuki String Workshop to be held at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists on Sunday, September 30. Sponsored by the Kindermaus Foundation of Chattanooga, the event will begin at 2 p.m. in Ackerman Auditorium, Mabel Wood Hall, on the Collegedale campus, and conclude at 4:30 p.m.

Mr. Berman, who made his debut at Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., on September 15, plans to give a short concert at the beginning of the program. Following that, he will work with individual students by appointment in a master class situation. From 3 to 3:45 p.m. students attending the workshop will be divided into three groups: 1. Twinkle to Perpetual Motion, 2. Allegretto to Theme From Witches Dance, 3. Gavotte from Mignon to Concerto in A minor, First Movement, Vivaldi.

Wisconsin pianist James McKeever will present a free solo recital on Sunday, September 30 at 3:30 p.m. in the Hamter Museum of Art Auditorium on Bluff View. His program will include selections by Scarlatti, Chopin, Beethoven, Rachmaninoff, Scriabin, and Nicolai Medtner. McKeever is the author of Fundamentals Of Piano Technique: The Conus Exercises, Explained And Illustrated (Summy-Birchard Music).

The Student Missionary Retreat will be held from September 28 - 30. The cost is $6.00 for members and $8.00 for non-members. The cost of food is $13.00 and it will be placed on your I.D. card. Please bring your own bedding and towels. Make sure to sign up at the Student Center desk.

A workshop in assertive management for nurses will be given at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists on Thursday, October 4, from 6 to 8 p.m. Jean Cates, E.D.D., an adjunct professor with the University of Tennessee/Chat tanooga, will be leading the "Assertiveness for Nurses" workshop in Made Herin Hall, Room 103, on the Collegedale campus. The workshop goal is to teach nurses how to manage daily responsibilities with confidence. Professional nurses as well as student nurses will be given training in how to make and refuse requests without feeling anxious, guilty, or uncomfortable and how to get things done without worrying about being well-liked.

Your Turn

What do you think about the possibility of another name change for the college?

It's confusing. When it's all over, what initials will end up in the shrunken on the hill?

-Gwen Speck-Soph.

It's pretty stupid to waste all this time and money when we already have a name that's acceptable.

-John Maskiewicz-Fresh.

If the name is going to be changed let's do it and get it over with. All the drawn out discussions and opinion polls are a waste of time and money.

-Bob Jimenez-Soph.

My A.S. diploma says Southern College. My nursing pin says Southern Missionary College. What will my B.S. diploma say? Who will believe I went to the same school for 4 years.

- Ingrid Kastorys-Jr.

I think we should either stick with Southern College of S.D.A. or go back to Southern Missionary College.

-Cindy Hamilton-Sr.

I think that since they've already changed the name once they should stick with it or go back to the original.

-Greg Isak-Sr.

Then do not squander time, for that's the stuff life is made of.

"Drop In For A Bite To Eat"
Another Name Change?

This past Tuesday, October 2, a hearing was held on the name of the college. The meeting was not well-attended although the opinions that were voiced certainly seemed to be that of the majority of the campus. The hearing was not for the purpose of actually changing the name, but to give teachers, students, and others an opportunity to let their feelings known. Elder Clay Farwell chaired the meeting.

The seemingly general consensus was that it was the process that bothered most people and not the current name; the majority of those present wished that a decision be made quickly. However, the majority also called for the current name, Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, to be kept.

Reasons for the keeping of the current name lay mostly in the financial area. Viola Sather, Director of Public Relations, noted that her department currently produces many brochures and videos with the current name, and a change would cost a great deal. Olson Perry, Director of Works, related that it was recently that he had contacted the FCC with the information that our name had officially been changed, and this had cost him $400. Another change would cost the same amount.

Mary Elam, Director of Records, said that a change would also be an expensive decision and a reference to buying stationary and other materials.

Despite these opinions, facts were shown that a change to the name Southern Adventist College has been well received. A survey that was recently distributed among a random selection of graduates, current students and staff, and trustees shows that Southern Adventist College held the number one position, with our current name ranking second, and Southeastern Adventist College and Southern College (solely) running third and fourth respectively.

However, the recommendation of the committee is that if a name change does occur, that it be changed to commemorate an individual. Some of the possibilities are Daniels College, Desmond Downs Adventist College, and Spalding Memorial College.

Although a future meeting has not been set by the committee on the same change, Elder Clay Farwell believes that last Tuesday's hearing will help in the decision making.

Talge Hall Renovated

Michael L. Battistone

Upon returning to Southern College after the golden days of summer vacation, I, along with the other residents of Talge Hall, received a pleasant surprise. For behold, I saw new carpeting and a new fish tank, for the old upholstery and wallpaper had passed away, and the first lobby was no more.

The “new look” in the Talge lobby is part of an extensive renovation program currently being extended in the men’s residence hall. Beginning at the end of the last school year and continuing through the summer, Talge Hall has been reconfigured to exclude reupholstering the furniture; laying new carpet; adding new plants, artwork, and lamps; hanging new wallpaper; and installing the new galalith aquarium. Perhaps it was the “woman’s touch” that was needed—Drucilla Glass assisted the men in the redecorating.

The offices have been remodeled as well. Dean Reed Christian, Head Dean of Talge Hall, swapped offices with Mr. Evans, the secretary, and Mr. Evan’s old office has been converted into a computer center. The facility, equipped with seven computers and one printout, is much more convenient for Talge residents who, up until now, had to go either to the business center in the ground floor of the Student Center or to the computer lab in Daniel’s Hall in order to complete a computer assignment. Dean Christian’s new office has been refurnished with new paneling, couches, and bookshelves. Also, a new guestroom has been added by renovating the room next to former Dean Nafe’s old office.

In addition to the lobby and administrative areas, the hallways and some of the individual rooms have been improved. New carpet has been placed in 40 rooms and in the halls of both A and B wings. Walls, halls, doors and more have been repainted, with much of the credit for the actual work due to Dean Qualley, who was actively involved in the painting of the building.

Of course, everything has its price, and some improvements are certainly no exception. Rough estimates place the cost for the lobby, office, and new carpet at around $16,750. The expense is justified by the fact that the changes were needed badly and long overdue.

The renovations have not been completed, though. “We have done quite a bit, yet there is still much to be done.” Future improvements include new curtains—which have already been ordered—for most rooms, and several fire safety features, such as smoke detectors.

With the completion of Brock Hall nearing, many students are wondering what is eventually going to happen to Jones Hall. After the English department moves out, the building will cease to have any function on campus. For this reason, the Southern College Executive Board decided on July 19, 1983, to raze Jones Hall. A decision on who will do the tearing down has not been made, however, although the college is getting various bids for the job.

Maude Jones Hall was first opened in 1917-18, only the second year of Southern Junior College, as the women’s dormitory. The following account from the book SMCC: A School of His Planning gives an idea of how it looked that first year.

“The windows and door casings were not hung; the walls were not plastered. Sheets were hung up to substitute for windows. There were no floors... no doors... no heat... no water, but the rooms were filled with youthful happy students.”

The woman Maude I. Jones came to Southern Missionary College in 1917 from Washington Missionary College. When she retired, she held the record for number of years spent in service in the faculty.

During the ‘60s Jones Hall served as a temporary dorm for the men while the current Talge and Thatcher Hall were constructed. Eventually, it served the purpose of housing those men who were over 23 and did not wish to live in Talge and those who did not fit in Talge because of an overflow. In recent years, the building has been used solely to house the English departments.

Jones Hall will probably be knocked down during this Christmas vacation so as to avoid the students who must attend classes in that area. A decision of what eventually will take its place has not officially been made, although the Board is leaning towards constructing a parking lot for village students.

Jones Hall will certainly be missed by those who have either lived or worked there. Yet the name of Maude Jones will never be forgotten on this campus.

The Political Role of Adventists

In contrast to years past, the Southern Accent has taken on a different look and especially a different flavor. Perhaps the flavor is what is most noticeable to those who take the time to read the paper. The latest comments are that the Southern Accent has become political in substance. The apparent difference is no coincidence. This year being an election year, we believe that this community should be knowledgeable of the issues that are involved in a presidential campaign. Most everyone realizes the church-state issues because our church keeps everyone aware of them. However, many of the other issues should be considered important among ourselves, also.

The title Adventist means we are to be totally separated from politics; it does not mean that we are to be ignorant of issues and apathetic towards voting. (Our title is a statement of two of our prominent beliefs.) If one lives in a country, the individual should be concerned with who runs it and how they (the politicians) run it. These individuals include our social group.

How then should an Adventist approach the elections? The answer is that we should learn the issues and the stances both Mondale and Reagan take on them, consider what effect, if any, their views will have on church-state relationships, and also consider which man will provide the leadership this country needs. Then we should vote on the better man.

Some may remark that in this presidential election, the populace does not have a desirable choice: Reagan poses the danger of heavily mixing religion and politics, and Mondale is too liberal. Therefore, the proper stand is to not vote at all. However, a decision not to vote is a decision for the winner. An attitude of apathy is a decision of approval for whoever wins this year's election. It is with these thoughts in mind that we say that an Adventist should vote in this year's election and in future ones, also. The role of the Adventist is to help make those decisions that will help this nation a better one.

VOTE RESPONSIBLY

Dear Editor,

After reading Royce Earp's letter to the editor last week, I felt I must take issue with several things this young man wrote about. It seems this man has included only bits and pieces of a newspaper article to prove an invalid point and then adds one step further by urging students to do what we have been counselled not to do by the Spirit of Prophecy.

The article which he quoted in the Chattanooga News-Free Press which talked about the National Democratic Party requiring state parties to integrate blacks and Hispanics into the party network also included women and the elderly. The article also went on to say that the Tennessee State Democratic leadership had refused to seek black women and blacks that the state party had absolutely no plans to engage in such activities at any time in the future. The Tennessee State Democratic Party Chairman also does not actively support Mondale. It is clear that not all Democrats are the hard core liberals characterized by Mondale and Ferraro. Many local Democrats refused to even show up at the airport to greet Mondale when he visited Chattanooga recently.

Mr. Earp also advised students to ignore our counsel of not voting for political parties and urged people to vote for Reagan. It doesn't matter whether or not he has said Democrat or Republican, we should not vote for a person simply on the basis of their party affiliation alone.

As Seventh-Day Adventists, we should be intellectual thinkers. We should be registered to vote and vote responsibly. The only way to vote responsibly is to take the time to find out something about the general beliefs and value system as well as individual issues that the various candidates have. When we tell someone to simply vote straight Republican or straight Democratic, we are asking them not to think for themselves.

Let's face it, not all Democrats or Republicans are created equal. I know because I am a conservative politician running on the Democratic ticket this year. I believe in strict separation of church and state. I am anti-abortion but anti-Moral Majority, and I can't see eye to eye with either Mondale or Reagan. Reagan's church-state issues are dangerous while Mondale is too liberal. I am not sure that I can responsibly vote for either this year. Think about it Royce Earp, and vote responsibly.

HANDICAPPED REMEMBERED

Dear Editor,

Last week a note was dropped in the Wright Hall suggestion box concerning handicapped access to Brock Hall, which is about to open. The concern was that there were not elevators between floors and without the elevator it would be difficult for disabled and handicapped individuals to gain access to the building. The hole idea of making buildings accessible is that they be accessible without having to go up steps. Regulations do not require all buildings to have elevators and do not require every building to be a hotel. When the Music Building, Humanities & Business Center (Wood & Brock Halls), as well as the proposed third phase (an auditorium) were planned in the 70's, it was suggested by the architect that they be planned as a total complex. With this total planning in mind, the architect suggested that one elevator would be sufficient to serve the total area. Elevators are extremely expensive to purchase and to keep maintained, and it was on the architects advice and suggestion that the complex was planned with one elevator in mind.

Access to Brock Hall is similar to access of other campus buildings. As long as the buildings are accessible from one exterior point, lift, elevators, and ramps do not have to be in place. Brock Hall is fortunate in that it is very close to a building with an elevator and that Wood Music Building has the same elevation levels as Brock Hall. The college administration realizes its responsibility and obligation in meeting the needs of the handicapped and will continue to be sensitive to them.

I appreciate the Accent publishing this letter as I have no other way to communicate with the concerned parties about this.

Sincerely,

Richard K. Reifler
Vice President for Finance

A Letter To Heather

Lori Heineman

"Lori, my dear," wrote Heather, "you are a knowledgeable college woman. I need some college advice." I thought I wanted to go to the University of North Carolina. I read their catalog, and it sounded like a great place—until I read that they have an enrollment of 21,000! 21,000... That's about one half of the whole city of Dayton! In a school that big there's going to be huge classes, and I'd probably be treated like a number. Mr. Moore [high school English teacher] told us that at big schools like those, you just put your student I.D. on your paper and don't use your name for at least the first two years! And with the large classes—how can you learn?

SM Club Prepares and Shares

La Ronda Curis

Last weekend approximately forty students went to Colhuca Springs Camp for the Student Missionaries Club Fall Retreat. The weather was a little cold, but the spirit was a warm one. The week provided a chance for students to meet new people and become aware of student mission work in and outside of the United States.

The theme of the retreat was "Preparing and Sharing." The group did much sharing, and hopefully it helped to prepare the way for other students to choose some form of mission service. Friday night was the beginning of the sharing, when presentations were given by student missionaries and taskforce workers. Each one shared a part of his or her mission experience with the rest of group.

Sabbath School and Church were held in a casual setting. More students shared their experiences as taskforce workers. Dr. John Waggoner taught the Sabbath School lesson and brought out the fact that we have a mission to the whole world, including our own Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Our special speaker for the church service was Dr. Norman Gulley. He shared several personal experiences that had been significant in his spiritual growth. In conclusion he appealed to the group to get involved with mission work.

Despite the rain on Sabbath afternoon, the group continued to go hiking. During the modifications program student missionaries and taskforce workers who are out in the field now were remembered individually, followed with more sharing. Many parts of the world were represented among the group. Reports were given on Africa, Panama, Belize, Mexico, and Highland View Academy.

The people in the Student Missions Club want everyone in the church to feel that he or she can be a part of the mission program, even if it's not possible to take off school and go somewhere else for a year. It is important for the students at Southern College to give support to those who choose to do this kind of work. The Club hopes that even more people will attend the spring retreat.

Almost four years ago, February 19, 1981, a senior at Highland Academy, Terry Wilks, attempted a double forward flip off the springboard and didn't make it. Terry landed from his flip on his head, fracturing his neck at the 4th cervical level and instantly being paralyzed.

"I was taken to Nashville Memorial Hospital by helicopter after X-rays were taken at the campus hospital," Terry recalls. "An ambulance would have caused too much vibration, and if any more swelling had occurred, it would have caused the nerves that control breathing to stop functioning."

Four days later an operation was performed to fuse the continued on page 7

What would you do about taxes?
Increase taxes only as a last resort to cut the deficit. Let indexing of personal income-tax brackets begin in 1983 as scheduled to offset income. Establish a “simpler and fairer” tax system.

Rely on an expanding economy to increase revenue and reduce spending on unemployment and welfare benefits. Push constitutional amendments requiring a balanced budget and permitting vetoes of individual items in appropriation bills passed by Congress.

Push a consistent and steady increase in defense outlays, including 7.8 percent more for the coming year. Continue the emphasis on modernizing major new weapons systems, while improving the combat readiness of conventional forces.

Display a strong military presence and keep up military and economic aid to counter Soviet-supported subversion. Continue pressuring El Salvador to improve human rights but oppose moves in Congress to condition aid on that basis. Help finance antigovernment rebels in Nicaragua.

Mondale

What would you do about taxing?
Raise taxes to reduce the deficit, mainly by hitting corporations and upper incomes. Delay indexing of tax brackets. Lower tax rates and eliminate many deductions, credits and exemptions.

Reduce the deficit by two thirds in four years by cutting the rate of increase in defense spending, containing government-sponsored hospital costs and slashing farm-price supports.

Boost defense spending but at half the rate proposed by Reagan. Shift the focus from costly equipment such as nuclear-powered aircraft carriers in favor of building up the readiness of conventional forces. Crack down on Pentagon waste and fraud.

Do you favor summit talks with the Soviets?
Invite the Soviets, on the first day he takes office, to a summit within six months in Geneva and attempt to establish an annual schedule for future conferences.

What should be this country’s policy in Central America?

Reagan Wins at Southern!

Out of 387 people responding to the poll which the Southern Accent conducted, 312 felt that the Reagan/Bush team should lead the country for another four years. The largest percentage of the respondents (from dorm students, village students, and Faculty/Staff responding) choosing Mondale and Ferraro was the members of the Faculty and Staff of which 19% chose the Democratic duo. The results of this survey are printed on the right. This was an informal poll and the percentages may not be totally accurate. The Southern Accent wishes to thank all respondents of the poll for their participation.

Six years ago Floyd Greenleaf started something additional for his class in Latin American history. "The idea was to prepare a section on the history of the SDA church in Latin America," said Greenleaf. "I was interested in South America, and when I looked around to find out what our church had done in this part of the world I discovered that there really wasn't much written about it. Church growth has been very noteworthy in this area--it's the fastest growing area in the world church. The project kept growing until I have three volumes."

Two are completed and one more is finished and written for the third volume.

The book is divided into three volumes of approximately five hundred pages each. The first volume includes all of Latin American church history from its beginnings till the South American Division and the Inter-American Division were formed in 1902 and 1902, respectively. The second volume is about the SDA church in the Inter-American Division: Mexico, the Caribbean, and the Bahama Islands. The third volume covers the church history in the South American Division, which consists of the rest of South America and the Caribbean nation.

The success of the Adventist church in Latin America has basically been one of "repackaging Adventist teaching so that the first impression is not one of doctrine," the church. This is considered necessary because the people of this area are basically of a Catholic background. The meetings are not called sermons but lectures. "The value and the beauty of the home, the value of marriage, problems dealing with youth, how to handle and rear children," health, happiness, and social issues are the first things presented. "Once rapport has been established they move into the religious aspects of these questions. They establish a confidence in scripture and once that is done they proceed with doctrine. If the Bible says all this is good to them then they don't question the Sabbath, or Daniel 2, or the state of the dead."

The main method of research for the book has been a document search with very little interviewing involved. "I've read thousands of letters from Latin American church leaders to the General Conference and the responses," says Dr. Greenleaf. "The Review was an amazingly good source of information when taken over the course of 70 years but there are some things that are not in the Review. I read the minutes of the division council meetings and all the official publications from the '20s through as close to present as I cared to get."

Greenleaf assigned as Chairman of the Division of History and Letters at the end of the 1982 spring session. He still didn't have enough time for the book, so at the end of the spring session in 1983 he took a year sabbatical and finished most of the book. He still has one chapter to go and will be "more than glad" when it's finished.

The first volume was written the old fashioned way using a typewriter, but the second and the third volumes were written with the help of a IBM personal computer and "perfect writer" word processing program which was chosen because of its superior formatting capability. "The computer makes the massive job of revising and editing much easier. Parts of the book are still only on diskette and has never been printed!"

Who will publish the volumes and what they will be called is still an open issue. Greenleaf would like to see them published in North America and in Latin America. He would like to see the first one called "In the Beginning," the second one "Beyond the Sun," and the third "Let the Earth Hear His Voice." Each volume is complete in itself but they go together to make a set.

Refuse federal funds to finance any abortions. Push adoption of a constitutional amendment banning abortions except when the life of the mother is endangered.

Press for equal pay for equal work and other women's rights but oppose adoption of the equal-rights amendment. Reduce the "marriage penalty" on two-family incomes.

Provide discretionary block grants to states and communities, reserving federal funds for the disadvantaged and handicapped. Offer tuition tax credits to parents of private-school pupils and back a constitutional amendment allowing prayer in public schools. Support merit pay and competency testing for teachers.

Aiming to help students cast a better informed vote on Nov. 6, the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration (NSCVR) today announced plans to organize simultaneous forums on the Presidential elections at over 100 campuses on Oct. 21.

The campus debates, collectively titled "Showdown '84," will be held immediately before or after the nationally televised debate between Walter Mondale and Ronald Reagan. The Presidential debate will also be aired on large screen televisions during the events.

"Students are strongly concerned about the issues, but are often uninformed about the candidates' positions on those issues and the implications of those stands," observed Gary Kalman, a senior at Clark (MA) University and NSCVR chairperson. "These forums are designed to augment this campaign's personality politics with substantive discussion of the issues."

The campus debates will feature prominent individuals analyzing campaign issues such as the arms race, the economy, civil rights, the environment, women's issues, and educational policy.

Co-sponsors of NSCVR of the debate include Project Vote, Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, HumanSERVE, United States Public Interest Research Group (U.S.PIRG), United States Student Association, the National Association of University Women, Public Citizen, Democracy Project, Public Citizen, Environmental Safety, and the Children's Foundation.

The National Student Campaign for Voter Registration is a non-partisan organization which conducts voter registration and voter education campaigns across the country. A project of the student-directed National Interest Research Groups (PIRGs), NSCVR was founded this February at a conference of 1500 student leaders from 42 states.

Students interested in organizing "Showdown '84" debates at their campus should contact NSCVR at 617-357-9016.

"Where the Candidates Stand"

Where do you stand on abortion?

Personally against abortion but, as a public official, would support the Supreme Court decision permitting it. Believe it is a woman's individual choice.

What would you do to advance women's rights?

Support the ERA and eliminate sexual discrimination in insurance and pensions. Push a "comparable worth" program for federal employees establishing equal pay for comparable jobs, whether held traditionally by males or females.

Seek more federal funds to improve schools by attracting better teachers, modernizing laboratories and strengthening graduate studies. Provide more support for minority and needy children. Would consider merit pay, but oppose tuition tax credits and a prayer amendment.

Mondale

Provide discretionary block grants to states and communities, reserving federal funds for the disadvantaged and handicapped. Offer tuition tax credits to parents of private-school pupils and back a constitutional amendment allowing prayer in public schools. Support merit pay and competency testing for teachers.

What would you do to advance education standards?

Gymnastics Team Organized

The gymnastics team has been assembled for this year, and it looks like an enthusiastic one with a lot of new blood. Myron Mixon, the student assistant, feels that the strength of the team's previous years has graduated so this is a year of rebuilding. He's optimistic about the team, though, and says that they are willing to work hard, have a terrific attitude, and have a lot of potential. The new team members are: Chris Lang, Mike Collum, Danny Britton, Fred Hillbet, Allen Cremens, Jon Marcum, Myron Mixon, Tim Tulllock, Scott Henderson, David Butler, Tommy Bates, Paul Jenkins, Julie Reed, Shawn McClain, Donna Kreyer, Karen Arnett, Voods Clark, Rani Styles, Sandi Monroperto, Karen Schwitzer, and Kim Robertson.

In choosing the team, besides the basic skills required, balance, guts, positive attitude, and willingness to talk about the Adventist life style were considered. The team will be going to local malls to perform at our health booths. Also, they are scheduled for programs in Jacksonville, Florida, Hays Academy, and Oakwood College. Their main project for this semester is the Southern Union Gymnastics workshop. About 300 academy students will be coming to this clinic, financed by SC's Public Relations Department.

There are two changes in this year's team. The first change is a plan to incorporate more team activities, such as pyramids; a choreographed, fast-paced, difficult routine using mixed doubles; and a slow silhouette routine using black lights and scintillating lines.

The second change is a different coach, Ted Evans. Coach Evans feels excited and a bit nervous about coaching the team. He coached a gymnastics team for three years before he came to SC and hasn't been involved in gymnastics in the last ten years. He says, "I'm committed and the team's committed, and there's no telling how far we can go and what we can do. Also, Myron is a good guy to lean on because he has organizational skills, is a good teacher, and full of ideas."

A new member of the team, Voods Clark remarked, "Coach Evans is organized, has a lot of Christian spirit in wanting to keep God number one, and seems like he will add a lot of fun." The team caught a taste of Evans' humor when they were invited to a four-course meal at his home. Those who were weight-conscious saved calories for the expected grand meal. After being seated at the long table, they were handed a list of items they could order in their four courses. The names of the dishes gave indications to what marvels were to only the most perceptive minds, so not until after ordering did they discover what their supper was to be. For example, a sleeping relative was a napkin, Eve's temptation-applesauce, brisk charge-oreons, and a atomic power-beans. If one didn't happen to order a fork-whel, that was too bad. The team retaliated by disappearing out after the second course so that Coach Evans would serve an empty plate. After the "meat" restrictions were lifted, everyone satisfied their growing stomachs. With a team beginning like the above, SC will probably be in for an innovative and interesting home show program second semester.

I'm going to tell a little story about a day in my life. Yes, that's it. You know, "bang five and all. I was driving into town... nothing special in that. I was cruising; I like to just cruise along. Also, my car was down.

There are some very nice homes along the way. They are big rambling places with lawns that I would hate to mow, and beautiful drives up to the doors — the American dream come true, more or less. Also, there are some places that make me think of the third world, not quite Khampachea look, but definitely not the style brought to mind when we think of civilized western life. Anyway, there is some scenic driving around here, if you are interested in contrast... OK. I was going to town because I thought maybe there would be a sale on Arrow shirts or something. Also, I wanted to get a fish. The one I borrowed from the dorm lobby apparently had a breathing problem because he stopped about an hour after he was poured into his new home. (Don't tell the dean! I was going to put him... the fish... so that he could be eaten alive in a split second by a trigger fish. Really, I didn't want to alter his destiny; just let him kick back for awhile and enjoy some cool jazz or something.)

But like I said, I was going to town (on the freeway now) with Mr. Ed (that is my car's name) at a legal lope. I passed by the knife museum and wondered for the thousandth time what could be so interesting about a bunch of old knives. For a moment, I could see it all. "Jo Bob Silly Jack caponized the last bear, I swear, in these parts with this knife back in 1895. He (Jo Bob) later died of food poisoning at the ripe old age of 42." Or maybe, "Gee, Lee used this knife to clean and trim his finger nails on this very spot to the heat of battle. What a guy."

(To Reader, you are by now probably wondering where I am going with this narrative. Suffice to say that I am still going into town.)

"I had grown to feel like a machine," he continues, "with doctors talking about my heart and blood pressure in a way similar to a couple of men discussing the engine of a Chevy. It was hard to start feeling like a person again, discovering a personality, taste in clothing, etc., when for such a long time my only goal was to be in staying alive." Before, Terry had had to learn how to be a person again, and so he started to think about going back to college, or something. But he decided that he would be better for himself to go for something he really wanted something. He felt that he was never "super good."

Now, he's working on a degree in mechanical engineering, following his enjoyment of design, and hopes to finish it up at Georgia Tech. "I've always wanted to be an engineer," Terry asserts, "and I decided that it would be better for me to go for something I really wanted than something I felt I ought to do." His interests, Terry maintains, have not changed dramatically. He simply found new ways to enjoy them. He loves horses and someday hopes to breed and raise them. Terry is also an artist. He draws with a pencil in his mouth, with his face six inches from the easel, a fact his talent has not suffered from. Yet despite the adjustments that he has made, Terry has often wondered "why me?" and has experienced times of bitterness directed at the seeming unfairness of his physical handicaps, but adds that he likes to think about such things anymore. "They say not facing the facts is bad," he said, "but sometimes it is necessary in order to keep persevering. Since the accident, Terry believes that his spiritual life has become more realistic. "I see God as my partner and guide," he says. "I have learned given me a set of general guidelines," said Terry, "and wants me to find my own way in them."

Terry is determined to succeed in his future, whichever direction it takes. "Life has dealt me a hard blow," he admits, "but it can't stop me from living."

THE "TRUE ISSUES"

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to your last issue's publication of a letter from Valerie Benton. She apparently is not informed about the "true issues" that are involved in both macroeconomics as well as our country's system of politics.

She says, in essence, that Reagan's economic policies aid the rich and blinder or deprive the poor. Is the totally unaware that the number one enemy of the poor is a high inflation rate? Reagan has only cut the inflation rate by better than fifty percent. What more is he to do to help them in this regard, short of handing out meal tickets. She also criticizes the fact that he was an actor and is able to communicate with great expertise. Does she desire another president that keeps us in the dark about his policies and can't communicate effectively?

Also, what's wrong with one concentrating on the good in America instead of dwelling on the bad. Didn't someone once say that a positive outlook will bring a positive outcome?

In closing, please let us open our minds to the whole story before we begin to pick at the details.

Jeff Peterson

Elder Hare of Burma Undergoes 92 Raids; Addresses Youth Rally

"God has given us a picture of the end of the world, and I feel humbled to tell our young people about it," stated Elder Earl H. Hare, Missionary Volunteer Secretary of the Pacific Union, addressing an audience of nearly 1,000 people gathered in the Collegedale Tabernacle for an all-day Youth-Rally on Sabbath, September 27.

The invasion of the Business circle explained the speaker, who spent over ten years in mission work in Burma, began in the middle of a Baptist mission in 1911. The chief begins to tremor, and the congregation realizing that this was the last time, fell to their knees praying the protection of an omnipotent God.

Elders Hare continued, "Fortunately, we were not caught. That day the invasions began simultaneously. When we received the alarm, we were caught. We made our flight to England. We saw the war's forces meet in the air over our heads and watch them as we passed through the sky. It was a terrible day. -1,500 people were caught in that battle and were taken prisoners."

 manpower, but also heavens, people from cities meeting. The theme of the message was "honey" was exemplified in a life, of Paul, the missionary. The first case of a religious school is to try and foster the principles of honesty, the ability to use both sides of a question, and the courage to face the truth. The person who is honest makes no excuses for himself on the basis of someone else's failure. To hide behind someone else, you must believe he is the broad-minded person who has evolved himself objectively will not fall into the error of looking to others, but will, as did the apostle Paul, compare himself only with the supreme example. The person who wants to do what is just in the eyes of society, is as formal as the perfectly modern as in the missionary to the Romans. Good intentions are as precious as the greatest; they only make them less frequent and infrequent.

Fire Prevention Measures Outlined

Mr. J. F. Persin, college fire chief, explained the organization of the volunteer fire department in chapel Friday, September 30. The members will collect the duty of every member of the college faculty in case of alarm and assigned men groups to specific locations.

In his explication of how to give "first aid," to small stalls and "second aid," to larger fires, Mr. Persin indicated instruction on the use of extinguishers and the method of handling the intermediate- and water pipes from the sprinkler system reservoir.

At the close of the chapel service a practice drill was held, students and faculty members matching in order that we might be able to bring, in our fellowhood, the fact that God has not forgotten His people.

In llment Reaches New High

34% INCREASE IN COLLEGE
10% INCREASE IN TOTAL

Faculty Increased by Ten New Members

On September 10, 11, and 12 a total of 376 students registered at Southern Missionary College and Collegedale Academy, according to Miss Ruby E. Lea, registrar. The College total of 214 represents a 34 per cent increase over that of last year. There were 162 Academy students, an all-time increase of 10 per cent.

The faculty has been increased by ten new members, stated President K. W. A. According to the President, the new faculty members are the result of a careful canvass.

Proressor G. S. Boynton of Missionary College is teaching several of the academic classes in biology, chemistry, and history. A second day of academic classes is also being held.

Professor M. B. Battle was formerly the manager of the planning mill at Kenee, Texas. He is now in the Health Service and is also physical education teacher in Miss Mildred M. Lea, of Andover, South Carolina. Miss Lea is the sister of Robert E. A., business administration student at Southern Missionary College.

In addition to these new members, the following are the new faculty members for this year:

Professor S. W. Dake, teacher of business administration, algebra, and economics. Mr. Dake was formerly the manager of the planning mill at Copperas, Texas.

Charles R. Ford, physical education teacher, is a graduate of the University of Tennessee.

Robert T. Hare, of the University of Tennessee, is in the Department of Chemistry.

Miss Mabel Giddings, of Helderberg College, South Africa, is in the Department of English and Speech.

Miss Bertha L. Walker, of the University of Tennessee, is in the Department of Biology.

Miss Lois L. Heizer, of the University of Tennessee, is in the Department of Economics.

Miss Elaine Wood, of Helderberg College, South Africa, is in the Department of English and Speech.

The similarity of the school at Southern Missionary College to that of Helderberg was noted by Miss Giddings as one of her first reasons for liking Collegedale.

Physical culture is the hobby of the English department head. Coming from New York State to head the Department of Home Economics is Miss Lois L. Heizer. A graduate of Atlantic Union College, Miss Heizer stresses the importance of both young men and young women learning the fundamentals of home economics.

An enthusiasm sport fan, Miss Heizer particularly enjoys roller skating.

The faculty added the following faculty members:

Mr. J. F. Persin, college fire chief, explained the organization of the volunteer fire department in chapel Friday, September 30. The members will collect the duty of every member of the college faculty in case of alarm and assigned men groups to specific locations.

In his explication of how to give "first aid," to small stalls and "second aid," to larger fires, Mr. Persin indicated instruction on the use of extinguishers and the method of handling the intermediate- and water pipes from the sprinkler system reservoir.

The Southern Accent

The First Editorial written by Frances Andrews

The purpose of the Southern Accent during the current school year is to give wide coverage of the news and activities of Southern Missionary College. Friends and parents of students will be kept informed of happenings on the campus, and students themselves will learn of events with which they are unfamiliar.

As the size of our college increases, and the number of activities grows, constant improvements will be made in the paper. We anticipate maintaining the same size and grade of paper as we now have, with as many cuts and cartoons as possible.

Therefore, support the paper representing your interests at Southern Missionary College. We need 1700, but hope for 2000 subscriptions. The campaign for subscription (sic) ends October 31. if you haven’t received a letter, send in the attached blank.

We want you to know what’s happening at Southern Missionary College.

BUSINESS CLUB PLANS FOR COMING YEAR

JT Shim

The Business Club has started signing up members. For five dollars one will be able to purchase a share (membership card) that will entitle the holder to all the privileges and activities for the 1984-85 fiscal year of the local Business Club," said the recently-elected President, John Brownlow.

At the last club chapel, (Thursday September 27) the Division of Business and Office Administration intended to elect nine members to the Advisory Board from the seventh-on the hall. Since there is a tie there are ten people on the Board. They met Monday, October 1, to elect officers from among themselves.

To the accusation that the dues this year are a dollar over last year's, the President responded, "But they are going to get a lot more for their money than last year."

"We're excited about the coming year," said President Brownlow on election day. When asked what he had planned, Brownlow was not very enthused about being quoted since he had big little time to form arrangements. However, some of the possibilities to be investigated and planned are the following: Business Club Weekend Retreat at Fall Creek Falls, Christmas party, Easter gatherings in the Student Center and faculty residences, fall-colors train trip, excursion to Stone Mountain for laser show, benefit film, etc.

In conclusion, the first Business Club-sponsored activity occurred in the Talge Hall rec room. Refreshments were served to about eighty people who populated the room that night. The main activity was the showing of the video Mr. Mom—a hilarious exposition of modern role reversal.

These plans were made within the first one hundred minutes of the Brownlow Administration, making the outlook for bigger and better things exciting. With this in mind, the Business Club encourages you to sign up.

Mind Conditioning Seminar Scheduled

Steve Morris

Professor Joseph L. Correa, an educator and well-known speaker from Peru, South America, will be conducting a seminar on mind conditioning as it relates to today's Christians at the American SDA Church School Auditorium this weekend.

"People are being programmed and manipulated by many things in today's society," says Correa. "There is so much deception going on in the area of mind conditioning that we want to make people aware of what is really happening."

Correa, who has a Master's degree in music education and psychology, along with his wife Linda, has done extensive research on the subject of mental health and human behavior. Consequently, he offers insight, information, and counsel in the area of positive Christian motivation.

Four different presentations will be made, one on Friday evening at 7:00 p.m. and three on Sabbath at 9:30 and 11:00 a.m. and 5 p.m. The final presentation on Sabbath afternoon, entitled "St. George and the Dragoon," is an informative, multi-media program revealing deceptions ranging from contemporary Christian music to games such as Dungeons and Dragons.

The seminar is intended to be useful for Christians desiring to build a strong personal relationship with God and replacing negative attitudes and thinking for a more positive successful life.

"Anyone wanting to reduce their lukewarmness and lack of interest in spiritual things, should not miss this seminar," states Mrs. Correa, who along with her husband has given this instruction to Christians all over the U.S. and will be traveling to Rome, Italy, next week to conduct a seminar similar to this. The seminar is free, open to the public, and intended to be of interest to all age groups. The auditorium is located on Bates Road near the intersection of Brainerd Road and Apison Pike about three miles from Collegedale.

Southern College Orchestra Regroups

Sheila Elwin

With the start of a new school year, the Southern College orchestra has again regrouped. The S.C. orchestra is unlike the average college orchestra.

In 1967, Professor Orlo Gilbert, conductor, started the group with 18 percussioned string and woodwind players. Since then, careful nurturing has expanded the orchestra to the 66-piece symphonic ensemble.

Now acquiring a worldwide reputation, the group has, since 1979, visited Korea, Japan, Philippines, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Thailand, Singapore, Australia, Fiji, New Zealand, Hawaii, Russia, and Romania.

The travels aren't over, though. Gilbert has been asked by Elder Charles L. Brooks, General Conference Associate Director for Sabbath Schools, to take the orchestra and form the nucleus of a world-wide symphony. Brooks, who is also in charge of all music for the upcoming General Conference session, requested that Gilbert direct the group for the G.C. this summer in New Orleans, Louisiana.

Also on the future agenda is a return to the Orient. Though definite destinations have not yet been determined, the plans are being set for the summer of 1986.

This school year's schedule will be as follows: Oct. 13-Pop's Concert, Oct. 20-Atlanta Medical Meeting, Oct. 26-Ping/Plfuter concert, Nov. 15-Church School Seminar, Nov. 17-Home concert with guest artist, Dec. 7-Christmas Concert, Mar. 15-Florida tour, Mar. 20-Collegedale church service, April 21-Dinner concert.

The concert schedule for November 17 will include guest violinist Kenneth Serge from Winchester Conservatory. Serge has performed nationwide, and in Canada, Israel, and South America.

Also featured with the orchestra this year is one of its own members, Kevin Cornwell, principal bassoonist. Cornwell is a sophomore music major and will solo in several concerts.

Annual Pops Concert
This Saturday

"America 1984!" will be the central theme for music to be presented next Saturday night by four major musical groups at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

The Southern College Pops Concert at 8:15 p.m. on October 13, in the Physical Education Building, is a program in the Artist-Adventure Series on the Collegedale campus.

The 66-member Symphony Orchestra, directed by Orlo Gilbert, will lead off with "The Star Spangled Banner" and "A Star Spangled Spectacular" in the first segment. "Brian's Song," "Yesterday," and "Dance of the Comedians" are also planned.

"Step to the Rear," "Save the Bones of Henry Jones," "If I Had a Hammer," and "Blues Skies" are some of the popular numbers in the repertoire of the Chamber Singers. The mixed-voice group is composed of two dozen students led by Dr. Don Rusan."}

Fall Religion Retreat
A Success

The same weekend that the SM Club held its fall retreat, the Southern Ministries Association held its own. Braving the cold weather, the Division of Religion and the religion majors' club co-sponsored a retreat last weekend at Hidden Valley Youth Camp in Apison. Along with the blessings of a relaxing weekend of fellowship, those attending were refreshed by Elder Warren Johns' presentations on the unique blending of theology and geology. Friday night the speaker demonstrated Adventist distinctive roots are in God's creative powers and His promised second coming. Thus the importance of our name Seventh-day comes from Genesis, and the name Adventist comes from Revelation.

Following a chilly evening, we gathered for Sabbath School in the warm dining hall the next morning. The adult Sabbath School was presented by a panel of students, moderated by Dale Morgan. Many commented that it was the highlight of the weekend.

Sabbath afternoon was spent in fellowship and free time allowing the retreat to achieve its goal—a time to escape from the frantic pace of college and to commune with our Creator. After this time of leisure, Elder Johns presented "10,000 Years in Nature," in which he demonstrates analogies and lessons which our species can learn by observing God's creatures. All enjoyed his ability to relate "the children of all ages" during this special "childshine hour.

Upon reflection during our final devotional on Sunday morning, several gave testimonials to the rededication, redirection, and renewed inspiration gained during the retreat. As we said our goodbyes to our guest, we thanked him for bringing us a message of both revival and reassurance in God's redemption and church's message.
The old makes way for the new, and an era ends as Talge Hall goes down in Southern Missionary College.

Talge Hall, named after Mr. James Talge of Indiana, who has been razed at SMC, and a new Library will go up in its place. Shortly after having moved the college to its present site from Grayville, the College Board planned a new men's dormitory, to be started in 1918 and finished in two years.

The men lived in what was called the "Yellow House," (the Thoroughbred), in tent houses, and in an old make-shift dormitory. Part of the men's dormitory was provided by the General Conference, but it was insufficient.

Mrs. Eva Gardner writes in her history that World War I had interfered in raising funds and getting necessary help to complete the building in time for the opening of the fall school term in 1919. Mr. Gardner continued, "the two union presidents, Elder Pearson and Elder Wright, called in most of the workers in the two unions connected in the work to help erect the new building. All who could leave their work came to help each other and the new dormitory.

These were joined by a few volunteer workers. It was a hard job, with a broken arm, still did his part in planning the work and overseeing the building in 1917, he had the honor of being the foreman of this institution in these years where the challenge brought in from such an arduous and outstanding liberality that the future success of the college will be due in no small measure to his generous gifts." Mr. Talge died in 1962.

Over the period of his life, after passing by and stopping at Collegedale in 1917, he had given thousands upon thousands of dollars and materials to the college from the Talge Maloglany Company in Indianapolis. He furnished the Southern Junior College residence hall, which later became Jones Hall, a dresser, a bed, a table and chair for each woman—at that time 50. He also made sure that each room had a rug. In 1913 he sent a carload of flooring for the women's homes. When the women moved into the dormitory, the bedframes were without figures, and the gasoi"
A Dedication...

In keeping with the theme of this issue the Accent Staff felt that it would be a good idea to interview the very first student editor. There was one problem with this idea, however: to find the person. First of all, we had to check out the bound issues in the SDA Room of the McKee Library. After going through the first few issues, we found what we were looking for. This reporter wouldn't have to go very far to track the first editor down for an interview. The very first student editor of our school paper was Frances Andrews, who is currently teaching in the Communications Department here at Southern College. Miss Andrews has been part of the college for nineteen years as both student and teacher. She has at one time or another filled nearly every staff position on the paper. The Southern Accent would like to take this opportunity to dedicate this anniversary issue to Miss Andrews.

An Interview With Frances Andrews

Robert Jones

ACCENT: Miss Andrews, how did you become the editor? Were you elected?

ANDREWS: In 1945 Southern Missionary College became a senior college. The enrollment was up 34 percent over the previous year. The first two issues of the Southern Accent were produced by the English Composition classes, under the direction of Elaine Geddings. As the adviser she checked all the articles for writing ability, and following issue two she asked me to fill the position of editor.

ACCENT: When you were the editor, how was the paper typeset?

ANDREWS: The type was on a linotype machine, which set the type line by line on strips of lead. The lead is melted and impressed, then cooled till it is solid. The paper was typeset by the College Press who also printed the paper for us.

ACCENT: How often did the paper come out?

ANDREWS: The Southern Accent came out every two weeks. We never had a late issue.

ACCENT: With the paper only coming out every two weeks, was it hard to keep it current?

ANDREWS: We did more pre-reports and follow-ups than ran in later years.

ACCENT: Did you have specific columnists, or did you just use straight news articles?

ANDREWS: More short, straight news articles were used. We did have columnists who kept up with dormitory and club news.

ACCENT: Were you involved with the paper all four years you were a student?

ANDREWS: Yes, during my four years at S.M.C. I was the editor, layout editor, and a feature writer.

ACCENT: Did you get paid for being the editor?

ANDREWS: Not one dime, but it was worth it.

ACCENT: How many years after you graduated did you return to S.M.C.?

ANDREWS: Four years later, in 1953. I was hired to teach English and Journalism.

ACCENT: How soon after your return were you chosen as the Southern Accent advisor?

ANDREWS: When contacted to come to Southern Missionary College K. A. Wright, who was the president, asked me if I would, along with my teaching, be willing to fill the position of advisor.

ACCENT: You left S.M.C. a second time, correct? When did you return the second time?

ACCENT: When you returned did you once again fill the role of advisor for the paper?

ANDREWS: Yes, as before the president at the time, Frank Nielson, asked if I would include it in my program.

ACCENT: When you returned in 1973, had much changed in the way the paper looked?

ANDREWS: Yes, I was pleasantly surprised that the Southern Accent looked like a "real" newspaper. I also preferred the weekly production schedule.

ACCENT: What year did the Southern Accent staff first use a Compugraphic machine?

ANDREWS: The Student Association acquired the first Compugraphic in 1976. The computer age had arrived at S.M.C.

ACCENT: Of all the positions you’ve filled on the paper, which one did you like the most?

ANDREWS: By far, editor, because you stay more in touch with the student body.

ACCENT: Which position did you like the least?

ANDREWS: Almost everything I did in regards to production of the paper was enjoyable. Although as the advisor I was not. There were a few tense moments.

ACCENT: Is there any particular incident that stands out in your mind which drastically affected the paper?

ANDREWS: Yes, the day Don Jelle made his presentation to the S.A. to purchase the first Compugraphic machine. Overnight the look of the paper was greatly enhanced.

ACCENT: Do you have any advice for students interested in writing either for the Southern Accent, for their own enjoyment, or as a career?

ANDREWS: Many students feel they wouldn’t benefit from a course in journalism. But I would say that anyone planning a professional career could benefit from the orderly, concise disciplines taught in journalism.

ACCENT: Did any of the other Southern Accent editors continue their involvement in the journalism field?

ANDREWS: Most of the former editors are either working in communications for the denomination or frequently having articles printed in current denominational publications.

Shopping Center Construction
To Get Underway in March

Preliminary plans for the construction of a new shopping center on the campus of SMC were approved by the Board of Trustees of Southern Missionary College January 25.

Construction, which will be done by the college crew, will begin in March and should be finished in August of this year. The center will be called College Plaza.

The architect is working on the details of the plans which will consist of a mall type. Walkways will be covered and well-lighted. There will be tenant floors in the main buildings, typical music shop and ample parking space.

The shopping center will be in an area not far from the university, and will be a convenience to students, faculty, staff, and visitors. The building will consist of shops, offices, and a restaurant. The restaurant is being made in the planning stage. The extension shops may be added later, the first of which will be a waffle and ice cream shop. A service station will be built on the north.

The center will be on the site of the former Recreation Hall. — McNAB

ACCENT DRIVES FOR 4000 SUBS

Every year as school begins some teacher wonders if they will have an ACCENT campaign. The school year of 1960-61, however, will be different.
The campaign has already been officialized. This means that every enrollment of students for next year will be valued by the number in the enrollment.
The senior campaign for the AC-
CENT has got off to a great start.
John B. Voigt, principal. Bob Armes, Maud Dubberly, and Cheryl Morgan have been going door to door on May 30th and 31st with an enrollment package. There is no cover for the rest of the faculty members, but those who receive the package will have to be on the lookout for trouble in reaching the goal of 3,018 students.

The campaign that this year is being managed by Miss Elaine Nettles will be the only one. Maud Dubberly, the Career Counselor, and Bob Armes, the vice preside, will pull both sides; that is, Bob Armes.
The campaign staff will be a success, says Armes.
Of course both sides are confident of a victory, and this confidence was well expressed in the speech given by both leaders. As we all know, both the Democrats and Republicans have been trying hard, but the object of this familiarity fact is to get you to build the county. So it is with the ACCENT—both sides will work as hard as possible for this victory.

At the beginning of the school year students who have obtained an enrollment contract will be invited to a special function in a place of their choice, which will include new students as well as the old students. It will be a special function.
The BIG PUSH will be made later in the year once every student has a chance to study for the campaign and get their materials, and be ready to show their true stuff.

Only by reaching the goal will the package be sent off to the ACCENT continue, and the idea will be passed per with no advertisements for only one day. This is to prevent that the subscribers who are now enjoying the campaign and those who have told others, and are referred to at the unasked. If any subscriber wishes to renew his subscription now, he may do so by sending only one dollar to SOUTHERN ACADEMY, Collegedale, Tennessee. These subscriptions may be categorized to any student's side by merely

I certainly hope that no one girls will have to go through what I did. I had a hate to Susan Parker for her birthday, Christmas, Valentine's Day, or the Fourth of July. No doubt Susan is very kind and gentle, but I have had to acquire the knack of gothaunding in any of college courses this semester.
When the guitar was going to knock scientifically as Capre on the sidewalk, she could do nothing but stand there speechless and wait for the helpless sounds which reached to some degree the aforementioned pedigree of proceed safely to class without even one risk of missing from her

Judy's Inspection
Perhaps it would be a good idea for Judy's "sights" to inspect her pretty carefully before she leaves the room. The sight of the band concert got clear and correct at the window. At the middle of the uniform was missing. She took care of that, but a little farther on she missed another one, and in front of the boys' dorm, helping some kind soul would help her remedy the situation.
We guess you will have to caron this time. Not too many of the girls would have been able to lead you the necessary black necktie.

WSMC - FM Start Tests
To Prepare for Broadcasts

WSMC, the Southern Missionary College's educational FM radio station, began programming on February 14, 1960 under the second call letters, WPTV, with John V. Ogilvie, general manager of the station.

The station's license, which contains permits granted by the Federal Communications Commission, was awarded on December 19, 1958, to the Southern Missionary College.

The station is an educational outlet for Southern Missionary College and has a power of 1650 watts, producing an effective radio signal of between 88 and 89.3 mc.

The tests will be carried on for several weeks immediately to between the hours of 5 and 9 p.m.

Women's Residence Hall Nearly Completed; To Be Ready For Occupants September 1

A new women's residence hall for Southern Methodist College lacks a few finishing touches and will be completed completely for occupancy by the first of September, according to Miss Alfreda Costerian, dean of women Costerian.

The building is so near completion, it will be used to house the delegates to the General Conference College Teachers Section here this week. While these delegates occupy many of the dormitory rooms, construction men will be putting the finishing touches to the building here and there.

Completed

The second and third floor dormitory rooms are completed now. All the furniture has been placed in these rooms, including wardrobes, washers, and stoves. The rooms have been cleaned, checked, and locked, ready for occupancy.

Dean and the associate dean (Sil), Miss Elizabeth Van Arsdale, has completed their respective apartments last week. These apartments are tastefully decorated and equipped with the conveniences which a busy residence hall dean needs.

Chapel

The beauty of the dormitory chapel is becoming increasingly apparent as the finishing touches are being given to this spacious and lofty place of worship. White oak pews were installed August 14, and the choice paneling of the rostrum area is now in place.

The worshipful atmosphere of this chapel should contribute much to the devotional life of SMC's college women.

The mailroom, reception desks, and dean's offices of the dormitory are rapidly nearing completion and give the campus visitor a glimpse into the warmth and hospitality which this building will hold for all students. The first class of students in SMC will move into the dormitory when school opens in September.

Very careful selection is being made for the furnishings of the first-floor living room. These rooms will be occupied by the first of September, but draperies and carpeting will have been installed.

Efficient

The dormitory should be an ideal place in every way and efficient without extravagance. The modern conveniences on each floor will include a laundry chute, a waste disposal unit, and an interior "dust-pan cleaner." The intercom system will provide for maximum safety, quietness, and convenience throughout this huge structure.

According to Dean Costerian, this hall will prove a true home away from home. The recreation facilities in the basement, and the proctor rooms at the front of the chapel by the chancel should help to provide for the physical and spiritual needs of the young ladies on this campus.

SMC Students, Faculty Give Program to Atlanta Parents

On February 18, Professor Gordon M. Hyde, Dr. and Mrs. Mable C. Hyde, and the music major from Southern Methodist College presented a program of songs, literature, and music at the Atlanta University Alumni Association in Atlanta, Georgia. The program was presented in response to a request from the alumni chapter to the Home and School Associations of the churches in Atlanta.

Funded by a personal gift, the program is a memorial to the late Mr. and Mrs. M. D. McCune, whose generosity made possible the powerful, moving vocal and instrumental presentations.

SMC students performed at least ten songs, including Copland's "The Bogota," "Goin' Home," and "Old Tangier." Two of SMC's female cheerleaders were also featured. Dr. Taylor played the last movement of Schumann's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Taylor at the piano, accompanied by Mrs. Hyde on the piano, played the entire composition in its entirety.

The group presented special material including Copland's "The Bogota," "Goin' Home," and "Old Tangier." Dr. Taylor played the last movement of Schumann's "Piano Concerto No. 1." Taylor at the piano, accompanied by Mrs. Hyde on the piano, played the entire composition in its entirety.

CANDID CAMERA COMES OUT

Debbie Patton

One of the highlights of this year's Artist Activity Series is "The Best of Candid Camera" featuring Allen Punt on Saturday night at SMC Alumni Weekend.

Punt is well known for his ability to catch ordinary people unaware through everyday situations and everyday jokes in film. Since 1954, Punt has captured expressions of the average US citizen by hidden cameras and cameras virtually all over the country.

A good indication of Punt's popularity is the fact that all the tickets for this show, including the no charge section, were sold out within a span of four hours. According to Dr. Jack McClarty, Director of the Artist Activity Series, "We had planned on opening a coke booth at the College Plaza, but it was all too apparent that we would not be able to go any farther than the Student Center. You see, there have been an Art Activity Series, they have always been sold out available. This is simply amazing!"

In the future, says Dr. McClarty, it might be possible to have the same program twice, once on Saturday night and once on Sunday night at Alumni Weekends. He stated this when referring to the fact that the reserved sections for the Alumni constitute nearly one-half of the available seats.

At the conclusion of the Candi- camera show, Dr. Punt is willing to talk with those who are interested in communications or those who are curious about his work.

Lightfooted, like backwoods pioneers, they prowl through the night shadows that blanket SMC, or crouch in the deep shadows to wait and watch...for snoops, or for a car to be burglarized, for a building to be pillaged...

They are guardians, protectors of our cars and campuses. With their walkie-talkies, they help call up the cavalry by linking them quickly to the College's police department...should any heavy criminal activity or danger be in progress.

Probably the school-funded night patrol is taken for granted by students, yet their service to us is essential for campus security and even the security of the surrounding College area. For example, the Godfearing people of this community seem to be concerned about drug traffic, but few of them realize that even the campus's night patrol occasionally becomes involved in investigating drug traf...

Then Jack recounts the night he was touring the biology class's lower level flashlight in hand, when suddenly he encountered a bobcat, fangs bared, paws audaciously raised, eyes gleaming with ferocity. It was an apparition from his initial fear that the taxonomist had done superior work!

And, then there was the night (2:30 a.m.) that Jack and Dean Brukenfeld found themselves in a foot chase, in heavy pursuit of a suspect who was fleeing the campus area. When they had at last detained the suspect, one of the classic moments of embarrassment ensued; the suspect was a woman, in her 40's, who was merely indulging a whim to go jogging.

Did you know that it is general procedure for the night patrol to stop and question anyone found wandering on the campus grounds after 10:30 p.m.? Mrs. Krettel, let 'em know you're coming in advance!

More on the serious side, and in all failures to Jack, his job is not a comedy, as it would seem. In this interview he displayed devotion and enthusiasm toward his night watchman's job, and he admitted frankly and openly that he was concerned about the image the night patrol projected to the public it serves. He expressed fear that perhaps students have an incomplete understanding of the role of the night patrol, and may refuse to recognize it as a legitimate extension of campus law enforcement.

So far this year, Jack reports, security has been quiet—perhaps partly because last year a CB and car stereo theft was caught by the College's police and Hamilton County Police. This rig could hit six cars in broad daylight!

Sounding chillier and optimistic, Jack contended that with the higher quality caliber of young people that are attending SMC this year, most problems of theft will be external.

The night patrol—they don't carry guns, but they still serve you and me. Their principal tools are their eyes and their walkie-talkies on swift legs. So, remember...10:30!

 Regulations Revised for Older Students Regarding Social Privileges

New regulations governing camping and mingled group travel have been agreed by the President's Council and the Dean's Council on Government. The new rules have been taken under study by students and members for several months.

A student who is over 20 (women students and those under 20 will have rounds) or who is an upper classman, who has a satisfactory discipline grade, who has a scholastic grade point average of at least 1.00, and who has demonstrated knowledge of and adherence to standards of social conduct, can be admitted to the Dean's List of Student Exhibited in Particular Privileges. A written request of social opportunities is extended to students this is necessary to students who do not follow designated social standards.

The students on the Dean's List must meet the following requirements go off the campus for shopping, or to concerts, without chaperone. They may travel in town without chaperons. They may not be invited to parties. They may not visit out-of-town friends. They may not visit friends who are not of the same sex.

The new edition of the student social handbook has been issued under the direction of Dean Richard Hemmert. Associated with him at this time the revised regulations have been John Buroker and Jerry Huculak.

CONGRATULATIONS SOUTHERN ACCENT ON YOUR 40TH ANNIVERSARY!

By BERNIE WILCOX

The research was a long wait with the fruits of the students upon the students' bodies. The book, too, as usual, witnessed a flurry of dust...as a result of books being torn off the book shelves. You may not suspect that they were used right up until seconds before the pages were then checked into the world of the unknown, or the known. Perhaps one of these books contained was due the report that tests were taken on the book before the book was checked back...

We wonder if all of the students had too much fun, after seeing some of the books. But an Introduction to the faces of the students when they were first seen in front of them. It was the consensus of opinion of the students that these books were only those that students have to have in order to get their degrees or to have in their houses of knowledge really was.

The chemistry students are now firmly aware that application of "knowledge" means. For the long language of students have decided that they need to learn the other language first, and the freshman composition students want to know why they need to apply language.

The desire to the entire work was the long, pompous "texts" students see making their way from the office and the regents. They caused a small piece of paper, which was only a foregone conclusion they received for a hectic work. But they will continue to trend this loosely, for it is the only way out.

We do not think that is any doubt in the minds of the students that the purpose of the administration to state the bacillus stand-ard is in the way to accomplish.

AWARE Program Started by Students

Lois Selby

Although substance abuse traditionally has not been a major concern within Seventh-day Adventist institutions in recent years, the subject has come under much scrutiny. According to several sources, the trend among college age young people and particularly in some SDA young people is a shift towards alcohol consumption, which is legal and readily available.

Larry Williams, a professor in the Behavioral Science Division and a practicing professional counselor, commented on some of the reasons young people get into substance abuse: First, it can be a means to cope. It is no secret that the American family is under attack and that increasing numbers of young people are struggling with family conflicts and problems of a broken home. Another aspect is that college young people today are required to master more material in less time than in years gone by. The academic and financial pressures have increased tremendously. Also confronting Adventist young people is the questioning within our church. Though hammering out doctrinal issues and our relationship to Mrs. White can be a positive thing, for some it produces a sense of uncertainty.

Second, young people may get into substance abuse, not as a coping mechanism, but "just to party." Peer pressure may play a role in each of the above categories if the young person has not set his own value system and learned to make decisions independently. Guilt and low self-esteem may also be contributory factors. Whatever the reasons, substance abuse remains a called a matter for another viewpoint on why some young Adventist get involved in substance abuse, see the March 13, 1984 issue of The Review.

Recognizing this trend, several students here at Southern College have formed an organization to help those involved in substance abuse. AWARE, (Adventists Working With Addiction Rehabilitation), is headed by Cary Hambleton and Kevin Klinvex. Kevin, a junior psychology major-religion minor, was raised in an atmosphere where drinking was accepted; later he and many of his friends at Penn State "partied." He says he understands the part alcohol can play in people's lives and that he's seen the effects in the lives of his friends. Cary Hambleton, who attended SDA schools, has overcome the problem of alcohol in his own life. The two emphasize that they do not look down on those involved with alcohol or drugs--they've been there and they know.

AWARE started out primarily as a support group for those wishing to get out of substance abuse. Cary and Kevin, and also Mark Wedel, and Karen Heidereich, are available anytime day or night to talk with those trying to stop drinking or problems with drugs or alcohol. Kevin states that it's very important for a young person to have a support system of friends other than a drinking group, and that it's important for that person to see that he can have peace in his life without drinking.

AWARE has expanded to include educating the student body about drugs and alcohol, and most importantly, how to help someone who is involved. The group has presented chapel programs and films, and is arranging for guest lecturers who will teach how to recognize and deal with substance abuse.

Funded through CABL, AWARE is sanctioned by Everett Schlinder, Dean of Student Affairs, and by the denominational deans. However, AWARE is operated entirely by students. Kevin explains that kids who shy away from faculty as authority figures, may relate better to a peer who has been through a similar experience. AWARE, in addition to group support, will be able to refer those with more extensive problems to Rosse Coleman Taylor, a professional counselor in the community who serves as an advisor and resource person. Kevin stresses that confidentiality is important to each member of the group.

In several weeks the group will meet with representatives of other SDA schools to share ideas and procedures.

Thursday Raid Results in Emergency Meeting

One might say that it was inevitable once the signs proclaimed that the electricity would be out Thursday evening went up. That night a host of men from Talge Hall went on a raid on Thatcher Hall, the women's residence.

The reason for the black-out was that the Power Board needed to change a transformer in this area. When the Power Board went to Talge Market and other businesses continue their business until 9:00 p.m., the Power Board asked to do their work from 9:30 on. A decision to do the work earlier would have resulted in lost revenue for these businesses.

However, no sooner had the lights gone out at approximately 9:40 p.m., Thursday, did the "fun" begin. Shouts and screams of men and women echoed each other in the area between the residence halls went up immediately. All of this bartering was in innocent fun games. A raid on Thatcher was formulated.

Suspecting that an occurrence of this sort might happen, the men's and women's deans had the residence assistants protect their respective halls and had calling security guards on stand-by.

Thatcher Hall. When the men ran out, they attempted on pushing their way through security, the police were called in. During the raid, a security guard was hit by a student; however, who the instigator of this incident was (the guard or the student) has not been confirmed.

Some of the ... women's residence halls. This part of the incident was short-lived, and fortunately, nothing was vandalized.

When all was thought to have ended for the evening, another incident involving an unidentified student and another individual took place in Talge Hall. After exchanging some heated words, the student hit the individual, knocking him to the floor.

Concerned that the raids of the last two years have gone too far, Everett Schlinder, Dean of Students, held a meeting for this past Sunday evening, October 14, in which all student leaders participated and in which Thursday night was discussed. Wanting to get some student input as to how the raid and future raids should be handled, Schlinder used some of this information in a faculty meeting held Monday morning. October 15, Schlinder related to the student leaders that raids of the dorms will not be tolerated any longer. Individuals who are caught or who are found to have participated in a raid will be disciplined. (The appropriate disciplinary action was discussed Monday morning. Another topic to have been discussed was how to handle those individuals who are known to have participated Thursday evening.) One of the student leaders, Russell Duerksen, brought up an idea as to how to handle emergencies like the Thursday night black-out: In the future, the administration should be prepared to channel the build-up energy into positive activities so that the problem will not occur again. The majority of the leaders liked Russell's idea, and plans of this sort will be implemented in the future.

As a result of this meeting, the time of this writing, some of the contents of it had been released. However, Dean Schlinder told the student leaders that the student body will be informed of its decisions.

H.M.S. Richards, Jr., to Preach at Chattanooga

Greg King

H.M.S. Richards, Jr., director of the Voice of Prophecy radio-broadcast, will be the guest speaker at the Chattanooga First Seventh-day Adventist Church on November 1, which is Pastors' Day. Pastor Richards will speak for the morning worship service which begins at 11:00 a.m. During the evening meeting, commencing at 9:30, he will report on action taken during the recent General Conference Annual Council and talk about the Voice of Prophecy's outreach ministry. Southern College students and the Collegedale community are invited to participate in this special occasion of worship and fellowship.

The Voice of Prophecy, one of the longest continuous religious radio broadcasts in the nation, was founded in 1930 by Pastor Richards' father, H.M.S. Richards. Since then the program has expanded until it is heard daily or on Sundays on some 750 stations in North America. Overseas, another 1,100 stations carry radio programs that bear the same name or are closely affiliated with the Voice of Prophecy.

Pastor Richards, a longtime favorite of the church's young people, has spoken at numerous youth congresses, Bible camps, and campmeetings. Many students and community residents in the region are familiar with his ministry over the years, will look forward to the privilege of welcoming him to Chattanooga. The church is located at 400 Tnncel Boulevard.

SECRET SISTER PROGRAM A SUCCESS

Ever since its inception on the Southern College campus, the Secret Sister Program, which was originated several years ago by Sigma Theta Chi (Women's Club), has been a resounding success.

Evidence of its success can be found throughout the campus. Walking slowly down the hallway in Talge Hall from the lobby with a container of ice cream from Baskin Robbins, Jon Marcum exclaimed with excitement, "Secret Sisters are really great!" Passersby in Talge lobby can perceive the aura of enchantment in the gentleman who anxiously paws through the box labeled, "From Secret Sisters." Expressions such as, "This is great," "Wow, I got a letter from "Smiley"; can you believe it?" and "This girl is on the ball!" can readily be heard. Many women have similar reactions. Several of the women had remarks similar to the following: "Sounds pretty good. I like having a secret brother even though I think mine already knows who I am." Sheila Elwin said, "It's excellent. It has helped me to get to know someone that I never would have gotten a chance to meet." Dana Green exclaimed, "It's fun. It makes life interesting!"

Despite the overall success, however, some women have been disappointed because their brothers have not written to them. Either these men have yet to realize the fun the Secret Sister Program can be or they believe that they are too busy for the program. Consequently, it has been suggested that these individuals at least write a letter to their respective sisters with the reason why they wish to discontinue writing. This deed will guarantee that all parties will be partially satisfied.

The Charley Gordon Syndrome

David Smith

Growing up as a twin often frustrated me. Much as I wanted to be myself, others wouldn't allow me my own identity. The members of the church in the town where I grew up often referred to my twin and me as "those cute Smith boys." Now what young, active boys want to be described as "cute?" I would rather they would have called us "little devils" or any other more appropriate phrase. What injured my young sensitive ego the most, however, was when someone would walk up to and invariably ask, "Now, which one are you?" It seemed to me that I never had a name; I was simply "one of the twins," and to my immature mind that viewpoint seemed to be my predestined identity for life.

I grew up experiencing the benefits and the deficits which a dual identity can offer. I well remember one time when my brother and I had misbehaved during campmeeting one summer, and my grandmother took it upon herself to discipline us. She went into the tent we were staying in and composed herself just as Ellen White counsels parents to do before disciplining their children. Once she was under control, she invited my brother into the tent. He reluctantly accepted her invitation and received what I am sure was his just due. When he emerged from the tent, the two of us stood there weeping and consoling one another. Grandmother retraced to the tent to again compose herself before dealing with me. When she finally came out of the tent, she grabbed by poor brother and started yanking him into the tent again. He protested rather vehemently: "But Grandmother, you already did me!" Her reply brought him little comfort, though it did lift my spirits some: "Now, David, it won't do you any good to lie." She promptly pulled his struggling little body into the tent and spanked him again. By the time she discovered her mistake, she found it impossible to collect herself, and, consequently, I never did receive that spanking. Now I'm sure that my dear brother deserved a double spanking, though I can't remember what he did, but it did trouble me greatly that my own grandmother didn't seem to know who I was.

One doesn't have to be a twin to experience an identity crisis. In fact, college students are particularly vulnerable to a particular type of identity conflict, one which I like to call the Charley Gordon Syndrome. Charley Gordon is the protagonist in the film "Charley." In this fictional plot, Charley, whose IQ is extremely low, is used by a group of ambitious scientists as the prime guinea pig in an experiment designed to test the possibility of artificially improving human intelligence. After surgery triggers major changes in Charley's mental capabilities, he undergoes a period of traumatic intellectual growth.

His mental growth rate progresses much more rapidly than his emotional and social development. As a result, Charley has changed so rapidly, and his head is so cluttered with new information that he can not psychologically understand himself.

This identity conflict becomes the focus during the film's climax. In this scene, Charley is interviewed by the world's leading scientists. These scientists ask Charley many different questions designed to test the depth of his newly acquired intelligence. His accurate but flippant responses quickly convince them of his superior knowledge. But Charley, frustrated with what he perceives as the shallowness of these scientists' own knowledge, asks them a question, a question which neither he nor they can answer. His question is this: "What is the answer to the question—Charley Gordon?" Charley's life has become one big question mark, years ago. He has pathetically reached out to the great minds assembled in that room and asks for an explanation of who or what he is.

But no one has an answer. Charley, as a result of the surgery and of the accelerated intellectual growth which he has experienced, no longer has a clear identity. He has learned too much, too fast, and he hasn't had the time he needed to keep up with himself.

Certainly many college students are subject to this same syndrome. They experience all the horrors of pressured learning during their college careers. They spend two or five years continually cramming knowledge into their brains, and they seldom have time to know themselves emotionally or spiritually. Studying, attending classes, working, and, occasionally, straining, form the deadly routine many college students find themselves trapped in. This routine threatens to convert each of them into a very large question mark. They walk about their various campuses wondering "What is the answer to the question—(their name)?"

I'm thankful that an answer to that question can be found in God's Word. The disciples' experience with Christ amply illustrates how an answer can be found to this question. As Christ prepared to carry out His earthly mission, He sent His disciples to help Him, and He trained them so they could carry on His work after He was gone. Since He had only three years to make His mission, and to educate these men concerning His own identity and His special task, He continually pressed these disciples to a pressured learning environment. How puzzled the disciples were as they watched their Master perform miracles, as they heard Him answer strange questions, as they observed his challenge to the established customs of their people. Their days were filled with new ideas and experiences, and they couldn't seem to keep up with their Teacher, much less to keep up with themselves.

The disciples Christ gave His students challenged them, but more importantly, they helped the disciples better learn about Christ and about themselves. Two key quiz questions Christ posed to His disciples are found in Matthew 16:13-17. The first question is, "Who do men say..." The follow up question asked: "But who do you say that He is?" If you feel as though you are passing yourself up, as though you don't have time to "find yourself," then take the time to answer the question—Jesus Christ, Lord, Follower of His, and find Him. If you will do this, then you will discover that the world is no longer turning you upside down, but that you can learn from the understanding of your Lord, and of yourself, you will be turning the world upside down. And the dual identity which you will gain from this process will enhance your life in ways you never dreamed of and will offer you eternal joys and personal peace.
Maude Jones Hall Dedicated

Miss Maude Jones was signally honored at a simple ceremony on the steps of the young lady's home on Saturday, September 29, when the girls' dormitory was officially renamed Maude Jones Hall. Elder T. K. Ludgate, chairman of the arrangements, presided at the short service, and President K. A. Wright offered the dedicatory prayer. As Co-ece- ference President, El-der E. F. Hackman offered a prayer, and the pipes of the Union. A poem for this special occasion was presented by Miss Margarita Dietz.

Literally hundreds of students who have attended Southern Missionary College, some of them now serving in foreign missionary stations, will remember Miss Jones as she stood before them in her classroom. To them, her response to the remarks of Elder Hackman and Ludgate was a familiar ring.

"This little ceremony has brought to me the realization of one of life's greatest longings—the desire to find an individual whose affection was deeply enough rooted to cause forgetfulness of the hopelessness of my name, and to produce a will-ingness on the part of, at least, part of it upon some unsuspecting helpless infant.

"There may have been a few promises along the way, but no fulfillments, and ever I have had to comfort myself with the thought that genuine altruism would forbid grief over the failure of either friends or relatives to bestow upon a child the name of an identification tag that I had always secretly regretted.

"Imagine then, my utter amazement when confronted with the suggestion that the girl's name, the very walls of which are filled with sacred memories of a twenty-one-year sojourn there was to be given, not part, but all of my common-place, insignificant name.

"And so my yearnings has come true in a larger measure than I could ever have dreamed. Formerly, I had hoped for the calling of a simple child after me, so that I may enjoy the joy of seeing my name emblazoned upon the brow of a mother whose sheltering arms are destined to unfold, however, yet thousands, rather than one.

"First of all to my heavenly Father, and then to the members of our board, to you Elder Hackman, president of our College, to you Elder Wright, president of our Southern Missionary College, to you friends assembled here, and to those I know throughout the Southland, I extend sincere appreciation and warmest gratitude for this signal honor. Not even the sense of my own unworthiness can dim the gladness of this honor.

"Because for years, many and blessed, my existence has been bound up in the life of this school—its sunshine and shadow, its successes and sorrows—I could wish for no more fitting climax to this extended period of loving service than the assurance that I shall still have a place in its thoughts, even when I shall have ceased to pass in and out among its busy activities as in the golden long ago.

"From the depths of a heart flooded with grateful memories of twenty-eight unforgettable years, I thank each and every one of you, and pray that our association begun in this college planted by God's own hand in the midst of the beautiful valley, may reach its perfect fruition from the day of the hitherwhere where there will be no more growing old, no more perplexing, no more doubts, no more failures, but instead, endless youth, sweet peace, even increasing faith, and a ceaseless passage from glory to glory."

A workshop covering a range of issues related to childhood cancer will be given at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists on Thursday, November 1, from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Dr. Joanne Scungio, associate professor and research/statistical consultant at the University of Alabama School of Nursing in Birmingham, will lead discussion of "The Role of the Nurse in Pediatric Oncology." The workshop, a presentation in the Florence Oliver Anderson Nursing Series, will be in Ackerman Auditorium on the College campus. Physical assessment, pain and nutritional management, psychosocial issues, and research areas are to be includ ed in the day's discussions.

Dr. Scungio, a native of Rhode Island, has extensive educational, research, and professional experience in the area of nursing care for children. Over the last ten years she has held numerous conferences, seminars, and workshops related to nursing research, oncology, death and dying, and maternal and child health. The University of Pittsburgh awarded Miss Scungio her doctorate, as well as a master of nursing degree, in nursing care of children. She continues her direct involvement in research projects dealing with coping with childhood cancer and circu- lation defects. She is research and statistical consultant for the Cancer Institute in Torino, Italy, which is studying psycho- social issues of childhood cancer.

The Candlelighters, an Association of Parents of Children With Cancer, and Health Care Professionals, is one of the many organizations to which Dr. Scungio belongs.

She is secretary of the Association for Pediatric Oncology Nurses and is vice-president of the Alabama State Nurses' Association.

The workshop fee of $15 includes CEU (continuing education unit) certification and luncheon. Anyone wishing further learning for the Division of Nursing at Southern College, (615) 238-2940.

SC Delegation Attends Bible Conference

Brent Van Arsdell & J. T. Shim

Forty eight Southern College students attended the Inter-Collegiate Bible Conference (ICCB) at Camp Yorktown Bay near Southport, North Carolina. ICCB is a get together for spiritual growth for Southern College, Union College, and Southwestern Adventist Col lege. This meeting was the fourth annual and largest ICCB and was coordinated this year by SACC.

The SC group left Collegedale Wednesday night in a van and on the touring bus for the all-night drive to camp. After a brief separation of van and bus, a stop for breakfast at McDonald's, and a walk around Hot Springs, the group rolled into Camp Yorktown Bay half a day later.

Since SC had arrived first they had the entire camp to themselves for swimming, sun-bathing, water skiing, jet skiing, sail- ing, horseback riding, and relaxing until a combined lunch/supper was served late afternoon. The SACC delegation arrived about six. That evening the two schools participated in an event known as an "Ice Breaker" designed for the delegates to get to know each other. College students en thusiastically indulged in some of the most ridiculous activities, which contributed to a sense of unity. The UC group showed up about five hours later because of bus trouble. Friday dawned rainy and grey. Several SC students remarked that it made them feel at home. "Just like back in Collegedale." The rain continued on and off all day, but mostly on. Umbrellas had not been on the list of things to bring, but a few students had the foresight and common sense to bring one.

Two study sessions began simultaneously at 9:30 a.m. Gary Swanson, the associate editor of L身边 Magazine, spoke on peer pressure. One of his demurrals was to have five people selected apparently at random to respond to some questions. On the third ques tion the first four individuals in the lineup had been previously instructed to give the obvious ly wrong answer. The last indi vidual was expected to go along with the crowd. Vonda Clark, a student here, did not.

"This was the first time that this has happened," Swanson claimed.

Dr. Norman Gulley, pro fessor of religion at Southern College, spoke on ecclesiastics. With the help of his overhead projector and screen, he expounded on last day events. At 11:00 the two groups switched leaders.

The afternoon was free time, with the harder souls skiing, canoeing, jet skiing, and riding horses in the rain. Fortunately the water was warm, and most people stayed in their clothes in spite of the weather.

SC had vespers, Bob Folkenberg and John Dysinger led out in song service. Ron Whitehead, camp director, in cluded in his remarks the sug gestion that Folkenberg take up music as a major in addition to his theology. Elder Jim Hermann spoke.

The weather started out continued on page 8

Vonda Clark waits to put her bedding in the van while preparing to go to the Bible Conference.
Behavioral Science Club is Formed

Moni Gennick

The Behavioral Science Club has formed and is ready for the new school year. Scott O'Brien and Connie Salisbury are president and vice-president, respectively, of this year's Behavioral Science Club. "I have a lot of enthusiasm for the club this year," O'Brien said. "I'd like to see a very active group.

One of the main activities that O'Brien and Salisbury would like to see happen with their club is to have the members exposed to some of the institutions in the area. This plan includes places like Modoc Bend, a state-operated facility, and Valley Psychiatric and Mountain View privately-operated hospitals.

The Behavioral Sciences focus on people, and O'Brien and Salisbury feel their club does the same. "We're people oriented," O'Brien said. Salisbury supports the idea, stating that people are fascinating and unique.

O'Brien and Salisbury would like to encourage others to join the club since it is not closed for behavioral science majors only. At present there are 26 members in the club.

"The Club is all the members," O'Brien said, "not just the officers. With their input, ideas, and support, we will have a successful year."

Blair String Quartet to Perform

The Blair String Quartet, nationally known and critically acclaimed for their concerts, recordings, and radio broadcasts, will appear in concert on Sunday, October 21, at 8 p.m., at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

The program, a part of the Chamber Music Series presented by the Division of Music at the college, will be in Ackerman Auditorium on the Collegedale campus. Admission is free and the public is welcome.

Quartet members are Christian Teal and Cornelia Huard, violins, Kathryn Plummer, viola, and Grace Miki Barning, cello. They have given concerts from New York to California, on National Public Radio, at the National Gallery in Washington, D.C., and the National Gallery in Colorado. The Quartet is in residence as artist-faculty at the Blair School of Music at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee.

Characterized by the Washington Post as exhibiting "exquisite balance, perfect intonation, and exemplary musicianship," the Quartet plans to play works by Haydn, Bartok, and Debussy. Not limiting their repertoire to classics from past eras, the group has also premiered new works by several composers, including Frank Proto and Samuel Rhodes. Their albums are available on Redmark, Orpheus, Varese Sarabande, and Grenadilla labels.

Religion Dept. Gets Own Home

Lori Heineman

The Division of Religion will finally have a place to call its own when Miller Hall is transformed into the Religion Center and renamed Sojocian Hall. Renovation, performed primarily by the Southern College Engineering Department, is projected to be finished by August, 1983.

The name "Sojocian" refers to the alumni of Southern Junior College (SJC). SJC was the name given to the college before it became Southern Missionary College. Religion Chairman, Dr. Gordon Hyde, describes the Sojocians as "some of the most generous supporters of S.C. in all of its endeavors—an extremely loyal and generous alumni group." Their generosity is shown through the $150,000 they have donated to refurbish Miller Hall.

Renovations will include completely new roof, central heating and air conditioning, changing practice rooms and music studios into spacious offices and classrooms, redecorated restrooms, and new lighting. A baptismal will be installed in the chapel.

Miller Hall was dedicated February 10, 1954, to Howard A. Miller, SJC music teacher for 15 years. Professor Miller is known for his songs in the Church Hymnal and Gospel Melodies.

The dedication for Sojocian Hall is part of Alumni Homecoming's Founder's Day program, Friday, November 2. A tree, brought from the old Grayvile campus, will be planted as part of the dedication. A fountain is scheduled to be built out of stones brought from Grayvile. The chapel will be dedicated to Robert H. Pierson, General Conference President from 1966 to 1979 and graduate of SJC.

Duarte and Rebels Talk

El Salvador president, Jose Napoleon Duarte, sat down with rebel leaders on Monday to talk about ending the war in that country. Each side gave its proposals and demands for peace and then agreed to meet again in November. The meeting was a historic first after five years of bloodshed, in which 59,000 people have been killed.

Possible Solar System Found

Scientists, convinced that they have found a new solar system, released a photograph Monday of what may be a young system 293 trillion miles away from Earth. The photograph shows a swarm of particles surrounding the star Beta Pictoris. Two faint streaks of light surround the star and extend 40 billion miles. According to the scientists, the particles most likely are made up of ices, silicates, and organic compounds.

Nobel Prizes Awarded

Two of the Nobel Prizes have been awarded so far: literature and medicine. Last week Czechoslovakian poet Jaroslav Seifert was awarded the Nobel Prize in literature. Earlier this week, three medical researchers won the coveted award in medicine. Niels Kaj Jerne, a Dane; Georges Kohler, a West German; and Cesar Milstein, an Argentine, shared the prize for their pioneering work in immunology. The three deciphered how the body's defenses against disease work and how to manipulate them to fight disease. Their discoveries are now being used in research in immunology.

Supreme Court Decides Religion Question

Adding to its already full agenda, the Supreme Court said Monday that it will decide whether a community may be forced to provide public land for the annual display of a Christmas Nativity scene. The court will use a Scranton, N.Y., case to determine whether prohibiting displays of Christ's birth from public property on which other displays are allowed is a violation of freedom of speech rights. The community had permitted the display until local Jews began to protest, prompting area Christians to sue. The Supreme Court probably will not decide the case until sometime in 1985.

Panel ask Amtrak to Study Route

A legislative committee agreed Monday to join U.S. Rep. Albert Gore, Jr., in asking Amtrak to study the costs of returning rail passenger service to Middle and East Tennessee. The proposed route would stop in Nashville, Chattanooga, and Atlanta. The argument against the route is that the line would not pay for itself, thus needing state subsidy.

SUNDAY

- Jewett 26 LaCa 20

In a battle between west division foes, Larry Johnson caught two passes for touchdowns and Rob Mahler and Rick Gayle scored one apiece as Jewett's team remained unbeaten by downing LaCa Monday. Captain Jeff Jewett threw three touchdowns passes and threw two extra point attempts in guiding his team to victory. The victory pulled them into a first-place tie with Jeff Davis' team at 3-0. Bryan Boyle connected with Dave Stevenson twice for touchdown scores but it wasn't enough as the loss gave LaCa their first setback of the season.

Rodgers 44 Gibbon 30

In Sunday's A League action, Myron Mineor scored four touchdowns and coach Mark Reish added a touchdown to Rodgers' victory over Gibbon. At halftime Rodgers held a slim 13-12 lead, but a Barro-to-Mixon hook-up and another touchdown pass from Eddie Salter to Mineor enabled Rodgers to gain control of the contest.

Peyton 11 Gibson 7

On the last play of the game, John McKeevott connected with Jay Decker as Peyton won their first game of the season Monday. The winning play started with four seconds left and Peyton never bothered to try for a one point conversion. Coli Peyton threw a touchdown pass to Mike Byers earlier in the game and Mike Gresary caught a pass from Dave Byler for Gibson's lone score. With the loss, Gibson dropped to 1-3.

Jones 25 Herman 19

Despite Tom McDonald's three touchdowns Monday night, Jones defeated Pacer Herman's team in B league action. William McKeith threw three touchdown passes connecting with Awesome Joe, Dave Hendrick and Jeff Decker. Dan Pajic threw two TD passes for Herman, backing up with McDonald both times. Herman team, with the loss, dropped to 1-3 on the season.

TUESDAY

Yankelvitz 34 Shanko 18

Hawaiian's captain Scott Yankelvitz threw four touchdown passes, connecting with both Rob Buckner and Donny Howze as Yankelvitz' team improved their record to 4-0 Tuesday evening. Yankelvitz failed to convert extra point on three of their first four PAT attempts. Dickhoff also scored a safety on a kick-off, following Toby Fowler's touchdown pass to Bill Dubois. Kent Gresky scored three touchdowns and passed for another while Tim Massie and Jim Moline each scored TD's for Grove, now 1-2.

Men's Club Sponsors Cruise

Cindy Watson

Whether out of curiosity or anticipation, you're probably wondering what the men's club has in store for sponsoring the Autumn boat cruise. The event begins 7:30 Monday night at Ross Landing where the boat, Mark Twain, will be waiting. The 3 to 4 hour cruise consists of going up and down the Tennessee River.

Donuts, hot chocolate, burritos and other Mexican food will be served buffet style. Mr. Earl Evans, Director of Food Services at Southern, and the cafeteria staff will be catering the meal.

After the meal, the excitement will be watching the boat go through the locks, the city lights, and... Of course, as Dean Christman puts it, "this is official PDA night--the one occasion at Southern where PDA is allowed and encouraged."

As for those going as just causal dates, have no fear. Casual is what the evenings all about. Even blue jeans are acceptable. It's a Mississippi style boat ride, but not like in the antebellum days where everybody dresses up. "It's too cold to be dressed up," says Christman.

Live entertainment will conclude the evening. Although plans had not been finalized Tuesday as to who the entertainer would be, Christman said the style would be popular romantic music and would last around an hour.

The thirty dollar per-couple tickets were on sale October 15 & 16. This is 10 dollars more than last year. "The company we've rented from in the past went bankrupt," explains Christman. "It's costing us twice as much for the same length of ride." As of Monday night, 50 percent of the tickets were sold and 20 percent were bought by girls. The cost of the ticket includes transportation. Unlike last year, this will be a one night event.

"It's one of the highlights of the school year because the experience is so unique--a time when people can let their hair down and enjoy themselves," says Christman.

Adventists Send 1,101 Missionaries

Washington (Oct. 10)--The Seventh-day Adventist Church sent out 1,101 missionaries in 1983, according to G. Ralph Thompson, secretary of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists in his report to the denomination's 1984 Annual Council.

Of the 655 departures for regular mission service, 286 were new missionaries and 369 were returning to assignments after furlough. An additional 446 volunteer workers brought the total to 1,101, Thompson said.

The 655 regular missionaries basically are church workers who go from their home country to another country, Thompson explained. Of that number 411 missionaries (62.7 percent) went from the United States and Canada to other parts of the world. Other missionaries were sent from the Far East, Africa, Australia and the South Pacific, Europe, Central and South America, and the Middle East.

"Calls for missionaries continue to come," Thompson added. "As of September 10, 1984, we had a total of 194 calls for regular missionaries--34 for physicians, 34 for faculty/teachers, 16 for nurses, 14 for departmental, 13 for administrative and the remaining in a variety of categories including other health-related occupations and publishing."

Thompson said the church has an additional 149 requests for volunteer workers in a variety of categories.

The Seventh-day Adventist Institute of World Mission at Andrews University in Michigan "continues to make its mark... in preparing mission appointees for 'cross-cultural' service," Thompson said. "It is fascinating to see how a group of mission appointees at each session arrives as a diverse, non-oriented set of individuals and leave a homogeneous group in just a short time."

The Institute of World Mission reviews the mission of the church and the role of missionaries in the fulfillment of that mission, acquaints newly appointed missionaries with the conditions and problems they will meet in the field, prepares them to relate to diverse problems in a tactful and Christian manner, discusses current issues in mission and explains the policies and procedures under which missionaries work.

In a brief report on membership, Thompson said that in the year ending June 30, 1984, the church had a net increase of 223,517 to a world total of 4,261,116.

The Annual Council and related meetings continue through October 18.

Shaving down is more than just a safer way to drive. It's also a great way to save gas and money. You'll get about 20 more miles from every tank of gas if you slow down from 70 to 55 mph on the highway. And that's just one of the easy ways you can save gasoline.

Radial tires save you about $6 on every gallon. Keeping your tires properly inflated saves another 2¢ a gallon. And a well-tuned ear can save you about 8¢ more gallon.

Broomshop Gets New Home

Ron Aguilar

A decision was recently made to build a new broomshop building at the mobile home park near the Student Park. This decision was passed in the September Southern College Board Meeting, and the construction will probably begin in the spring.

The building which now holds the Supreme Broom Company is under lease from McKee Bakery. This lease runs out in a year and a half, and McKee Bakery will be moving into the building then. This action presents the need for a new home for the Supreme Broom Company.

Southern College owns ten acres of land which is now being used as the mobile home park. Recently, there has been a decline in the popularity of living in trailers, leaving many open spaces at the mobile home park. The college, therefore, plans to change a section into an industrial area, constructing a building to house the Supreme Broom Company.

Once completely moved into the new building, the Supreme Broom Company will have 20 percent more space than it currently has. The added space is important because it should increase the income potential of the broom shop.

An interesting note is that by the time the new broom shop begins functioning, the college will have spent around half a million dollars on its construction. This amount will be paid by the Supreme Broom Company, however, and not student tuition.

The college's involvement in the company's move is prompted by the fact that Southern College owns it. In April of this year, the Supreme Broom Company was purchased by SC. This move was done mainly to provide students with another source of employment. The college is very pleased right now to have over 20 students employed there and hopes to increase the number as well as the student income after the completion of the new building.

The history of the broom shop is an interesting one. A certain Mr. Schroeder from Kentucky wanted his son, Bill, to have a Christian education. But money was scarce and the work that Bill did best was not one of the industries at the college. So Bill came to college with some old type broom presses, wipers, and choppers—all operated by hand—along with a wagon full of broom corn. His father had told him that if he made enough brooms to pay his expenses, the college would help him set them. Bill probably never realized that he would start one of the college's most productive industries. The first broom shop was started in 1924 and has become not only one of the oldest industries on campus but also one of the most profitable.

CABL Week Leaves Students “Healthier and Wiser”

Norman Hobbs

CABL Week was a great success. Collegiate Adventists for Better Living (CABL) is a program which emphasizes good health and is sponsored by Campus Ministry. Assistant Chaplain Dale Tunnell was happy with the results: “I believe that we have achieved our goal because people are talking about health.” Many students feel “more aware than ever” about their health and are thankful for a week to become more conscious about better living. Troy Rockwell says that CABL Week was great: “I never knew it existed until this year.” CABL director Don Welch felt that the week was an awesome success and hopes that everyone benefited from the programs.

During the entire week, CABL Week began on Monday the 15th with a dental booth in the cafeteria. On Tuesday, information about eye and body donation could be obtained from a booth in the Student Center. Also, a special movie on running was shown during Tuesday’s chapel. Starting on Tuesday and continuing through Friday, Wildwood Sanitarium and Hospital shared information, took blood pressures, and gave health age and longevity appraisals for the Student Center. The health age appraisal stated one’s health age based on current health habits and his achievable age if he adopted sound health recommendations. The longevity appraisal expressed one’s expected remaining years of life based on present health habits and his life if he followed the suggested health recommendations. Health recommendations included such things as eating regular meals, avoiding snacking, losing or gaining weight, getting plenty of rest, and getting lots of exercise. Wildwood gave appraisals to nearly 600 people.

On Wednesday, skin fold fat tests and blood pressure were taken in the cafeteria. That evening Dave Sitals, medical director at Mountainview Hospital, spoke at Wednesday night’s prayer meeting.

On Thursday, a group from Metropolitan Hospital checked 107 people for diabetes, and the eyes and ears van, which checked people’s hearing, reported 100 hearing tests. CABL Week’s last feature was speaker Dr. Richard Ruhlman, private physician and health lecturer from Chattanooga. Dr. Ruhlman talked about “Being Where the Action Is.” The steps he suggested were to guard our heritage by honoring God in all we do and by forming good habits, to gird our minds by aiming high and by feeding our minds only pure things, and to go for “gold” instead. Thus, the key to success is to aim high because we become what we think. Dr. Ruhlman shared facts that prove that if we follow the health suggestions of Ellen G. White, we will be where the action is. Thanks to CABL Week our campus has learned helpful hints that we can use as Collegiate Adventists for Better Living.

Throughout the years one of the biggest events on campus has been the Fall Festival, and the one planned for this year will rival those in past years. Already we’ve seen the terrify look with T-shirts, sweats, scrubs, and torn blue jeans. For most people it was a real “comfortable” day. Now we are in the process of experiencing “REVENGE OF THE NERDS.” If an unsuspecting visitor happened to wander on campus, he would probably beat a hasty retreat away from a studs of bookcases, polyester, mix-matched clash, crazy outfits, and a chronic habit of nose picking. If we could persuade this visitor to stay until evening, he would be greatly relieved to find a bit more “normal” look of western duds, hats, boots, and flannel shirts—Hee Haw style. A picnic at 5:30 p.m. between Heackerman Hall and the Student Center would completely the country atmosphere with chickwagoo grub and some knee-slippping, banjo-picking, country-western music.

There will be a quick shift from rural to urban by Friday morning, though. The atmosphere will definitely be sophisticated when those in high society make their debut appearance, dressed in elegance—from tuxedos and formal to super preppy to the “night out on the town look.”

In keeping with all this, there will be a croissaint break at 10:00 a.m. and a secret surprise around noon. Don’t forget to get your “look” recorded forever during the picture session on the steps of Lyon Wood Hall at 12:30 everyday.

The best part of the week will be Sunday night. At Fillman’s...
Letters... Proposed Road Still in Planning Stages

Brent Van Arsdale

A proposed road from College Dale north to the interstate is still in the planning stages, says Colledge Dale City Manager Lee Holland. "The only thing that has been done about this road is that Hamilton County has had an engineering study done surveying possible routes." The new road would give College Dale better access to I-75 than the Ooltewah-Ringgold Road route, but currently the new route is not even "remotely finalized," said Holland.

The road is needed because of the large amount of truck traffic from Mckeek Bakery and other shippers. The trucks are not able to use Ooltewah-Ringgold Road because its low underpass and small width make it unsuitable for heavy trucks. College Dale Mayor Wayne Vandevere said that some of the push for a better road came last spring after several accidents on Apache Pike. The road would also benefit the planned industrial park in Ooltewah, he said. If the road is built, the agency in charge will be Hamilton County. The money will come from whatever funds can be obtained. Federal grants will definitely be sought, however. State, county, and local revenue will finance the remainder of the cost.

Teachers Salaries Increasing

C. D. N. S.

Teaching salaries are on the rise, but statistics disagree on the amount of the increase.

According to the American Federation of Teachers, a 500,000-member union, last year's earnings increased 9.5 percent to an average $20,547. In terms of buying power, however, that's 10.6 percent smaller than 10 years ago. Another survey of 2,100 full-time faculty members by John Minter Associates, a research firm in Boulder, Colo., reported a 7.6 percent increase to an average $28,040 salary (not including fringe benefits).

The surveys agree, however, that the increase means salaries increased more than inflation for the second straight year. The AFT figures show the highest average salaries ($32,297) and the lowest in Mississippi ($14,320). Projections by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics indicate less demand through 1995 for college and high school teachers, more for vocational-educational teachers and more for pre-education, kindergarten and elementary school teachers.

Life is not so short but there is always time for courtesy.

Reflections

The Idea of an Education

Jan Holaska

College, like love, is sometimes better the second time around. At least that's how it was for me as a student. During my first try I was chiefly interested in easy classes and good friends (this was 1959), and a C was just dandy, thank you. Maybe that had something to do with how the experience ended.

I remember my last talk with the academic dean as he gently explained that, having averaged just a little two-point-for-a-couple of semesters, I was welcome to try elsewhere. That conversation was my door to adulthood. The army and a few years in the business world completed the transition. Then, just as I had become used to the idea that I would never go beyond a rudimentary education, Christ intervened, and I found myself back at college. Be grateful for a difference there was this time. A walk around Pacific Union College the day before registration was like Moses' sight of the burning bush. Although I had spent the last several years in San Francisco's financial district, the buildings on that campus looked far more impressive than any I had seen in a long time. They were full of people whose lives were dedicated—the wonder of it—to giving out information to make others more successful. I visualized members of the physics or business departments trading away high-paying jobs for privilege and burden of teaching. (It's true enough. My friend Richard Ericson has done that here this semester.)

Then I saw that civilization rests on a far different base than is generally supposed. Not the wheel. Oh no. At the center of the civilized world stands a school. The ancient Mayans maintained a high culture without any wheels at all. Schools, they had.

But even the second time around did not show me all of it at once. That first day I actually missed two thirds of the picture.

Only later did I begin to notice the vast difference between training, important as it is, and what is called "liberal education." That difference is easier to illustrate than to define. Consider: according to a recent study, people with exclusively technical backgrounds often blossom early in companies like IBM, AT&T and Transamerica, picking up quick promotion ahead of their literally-educated colleagues who have spent significant time studying people-related subjects, especially history, literature, languages, etc. But then a strange thing happened. The purely technical people tend to stop cold just below middle-management level, while their humanities-oriented peers slide by into the big salaries near the top of the pyramid.

How can that be? The answer is that anyone who wants to produce results through people had better understand his co-workers' non-technical side. The humanities are still the best general education for that understanding. Literally-educated students have a bright window into the collective right brain of mankind, giving them a clear advantage over anyone with an exclusively left-brain orientation. For that reason, higher education historically has tried to produce leaders by focusing hard on the humanities. Although technical and scientific coursework is essential to a good preparation for most fields today, potential leaders in all areas still need a liberal arts education.

The third ingredient of a real education was honored for 2,500 years before this century. Now though, it is mostly left out. From the schools of the prophets to those of Aristotle and Plato, the great scholarly tradition has emphasized spiritual things. Graduates of Oxford and Cambridge (not to mention those of Harvard) were fitted for the ministry if they chose to enter it. But the hard experience has shown that faith is the best way to bind the two halves of the brain together. Ignoring this more recently, the universities of the world have tried to de-emphasize the spiritual and still produce leaders of mental and moral import. Our present day this is the kind of education has succeeded is easy to judge; anyone can snap on his T.V. at random for a loud and clear answer. Just now these secular universities are agonizing over how to raise at least $2,000, which is not an unreasonable goal considering last year's profit of $1,800 (an increase of over 100% from the previous year).

I am thrilled to find so many students on this campus who are smarter than I was the first time around. They know that college must not be simply a social adventure with a little learning thrown in. But I wonder whether they understand clearly that higher education cannot just provide training. Do they recognize that any educated person needs a strong background in the liberal arts along with any purely technical or scientific preparation? Do they see that the payoff is not simply in being a "well-rounded person," but in serious anticipation of leadership? Do they realize as well that this preparation is incomplete without the spiritual dimension?

We here at Southern should not feel at all shy in the presence of huge and well-funded state institutions around us. By God's grace we offer education in the rare, true sense of the term, and under His mercy we shall continue to do so.

Annual Sickness

C. D. N. S.

A recent report stated that in 1980 Americans experienced 19.1 average days of restricted activity, which refers to those days spent in bed or otherwise missing from work because of health reasons.

The 19.1 average is one day more than in 1975–3.1 more than 1971. Based on 1980 statistics, the report reflected interviews 103,000 people in 39,000 households (46).

Money seems to make a difference, as families with incomes of $25,000 or more had the lowest rates of restricted activity, and those with income of under $5,000 had the highest rates of disability. That's an average of five days yearly of missed work.

Blacks, with higher restricted activity rates, missed fewer school days than whites–4.1 to 4.

Surprisingly, people living on the sunny West Coast had three more days of restricted activity than the national average.

SC ADVISEMENT BOOK PUBLISHED

A Guide to Academic Advisement, a 150-page book giving suggested year-by-year schedules and career information for each of the majors offered at SC, has been published by the SC Records Office, just in time for the advisement period for second semester, which begins October 29.

"Choosing a career and finding a job after graduation will be easiest for those students who have a clear-headed view of opportunities and problems ahead of them," according to Mary Elam, Director of Records. That is why she has compiled this information from the SC division chairs and other authoritative sources such as the Occupational Outlook Handbook and the College Placement Council's Salary Survey.

Career information listed for each major includes such items as job availability (including denominational opportunities), salary possibilities, and sources of the SC information.

General education requirements at SC are outlined in the first section of the book. This portion of the guide also includes detailed information on the placement of the 1984 graduates, contributed by Evonne Crook of the Testing and Counseling Office.

Included are such tidbits of information as the fact that the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that a college graduate is three times less likely to be unemployed as a high school graduate. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, people who complete four years of college expect lifetime earnings averaging nearly 40 percent higher than high school graduates.

Elam cautioned, however, that students should not select a career solely because it is presently in vogue or leads to high earnings. They should follow their own best by selecting a profession or vocation that is compatible with their interests and talents. Even the most glittered fields will need replacements for those who retire.

According to the October 10, 1984, issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education, more students are seeking help from their colleges in planning their careers, but resources have not kept pace with the increased demand. It is the aim of Dr. William Allen, Academic Vice-President, to use the resources available at SC in the best possible way to improve the quality of academic advisement. He foresees that The Guide to Academic Advisement will become a yearly publication and is pleased to announce that Dr. Carole Haynes, Director of the Teaching/Learning Center, has been appointed to take an increasingly active role in coordinating advisement.

The amount of career information that can be given in this handbook is necessarily limited. It is designed to aid students in the selection of a major and of the courses needed to complete a major, but does not take the place of the official college catalog.

As they outline their personal year-by-year schedules, students should study this guide and the SC catalog carefully and stay in close touch with their advisers. They can find more in-depth information on their chosen careers at the SC Testing and Counseling Center, the McKee Library, and by writing to the sources of information listed in the handbook.

Copies of A Guide to Academic Advisement have been given to each academic adviser, are available for personal at the dormitories, and are on reserve at the McKee Library.

For the next two weeks, October 21 - November 9, Southern College will have its advisement period for Spring Semester. The time is set aside so that students can meet with their faculty advisers and plan their schedules for the second half of the school year.

This pre-registration will cut down on the amount of time it will take to register on January 7 (Registration Day). It also gives the records office an opportunity to see what classes are the most popular and at what times. This if any conflicts arise, they may be able to correct them before second semester begins.

The process begins with the student looking over the new class schedule and getting an idea as to what classes are offered and when they are offered. Then after making an appointment with his adviser, the two discuss a probable schedule and place it on a form that the adviser gives to the student.

After this is completed, the student takes the schedule to the Records Office in Wright Hall. The form is stamped with a number, and this number is what determines a student's time of registration. For this reason, Miss Elam, Director of Records, advises that it is the student's advantage to see his adviser as soon as possible.

Students who wish to change their program after having completed the pre-registration steps, may do so until November 15. After this date, he will have to wait till the actual registration period.

The fact that pre-registration is upon us so quickly shows how fast time can fly, so students are encouraged not to delay their advisement sessions.

We the People . . .
Church and State: A Dangerous Mix

Russell Duerksen
1984 Democratic National Convention—The address sways as SDA minister, Wally Phelps, sings at the conclusion of another minister's, Jesse Jackson, speech—1984 Republican National Convention—There is a roar of applause as Jerry Falwell makes a short statement and then gives the benediction. Politics and religion: much has been said about them from square one of this campaign, as if this was the first time they had mixed in American history. I strongly dispute that point and propose that the threat of religion has always been mixed in American history (examine the campaigns of Presidents Kennedy and Hayes, and Governors Smith of Wyoming), and what is now being seen in this election is the beginning of the public's realization and acceptance of that fact. Having stated that premise, I look at today's church-state relationship in two different lights: that of a citizen and that of an Adventist.

As a citizen, I find this involvement of religious organizations in politics of no great concern. The constitution gives to every group or individual an equal right to try and influence the political process by expressing their viewpoints. This right extends to Jerry Falwell, Jesse Jackson, and the Catholic bishops, just as much as it extends to Laue Kindred of the AFL-CIO, Jay Rockefeller, and the local chamber of congress. This country is a democracy, and those that can assemble a consensus should be allowed to govern.

However, as an Adventist Christian, I see this issue in an entirely different and disturbing light. Granted, religious involvement has been present for political time, but what concerns me is the shift of emphasis of this political involvement. It has shifted from moral and political issues, such as prohibition, abortion, poverty, and issues of war and peace, to more overly religious issues, such as abortion and prayer in schools. These issues are entering directly into the gray area between church and state, and it is in this area that religious intolerance and persecution may begin. This emphasis, and not the fact that religious organizations are involved in the political process, is the real item of concern. Unfortunately, it is probably here to stay, and thus we should learn to deal with it.

In conclusion, the real discussion of the issue of religious involvement in public life should be centered not with the actual involvement, but with the direction this involvement is leading America. It is our duty both as Christians and citizens to evaluate the situation for what it is, and then to deal with it effectively. (Russell Duerksen is a senior history/computer science major, pursuing a pre-law program. The ideas expressed in this column are his own and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Southern Accent, the Student Association, and Southern College.)

Adventists to Vote on Ordination of Women

The Seventh-day Adventist Church will vote on whether to ordain women to the gospel ministry at its General Conference Session in New Orleans, June 27-July 6, 1985.

The church's 1984 Annual Council yesterday responded to a request of the church's Columbia Union Conference (area headquarters for the mid-Atlantic states) and the Potomac Conference (local headquarters for Virginia, the District of Columbia, and part of Maryland) that it act to permit women serving as associates in pastoral care and who serve as local church elders to baptize, that church policy be amended to permit granting of ministerial licenses to women and that the church consider the ordination of qualified women to the gospel ministry. The Annual Council asked the Potomac Conference "to keep tabled the issues of ministerial licenses for New Women and baptism by women... until the larger issue of women in the gospel ministry is decided by the Church" at its 1985 General Conference Session. Such sessions meet every five years and are the ultimate authority on church doctrine and working policies.

The Annual Council noted that "the issues raised by the Potomac Conference and Columbia Union cannot be resolved without deciding the central issue of women being eligible for ordination to the gospel ministry.

The council voted a three-part program leading to the 1985 consideration of ordination of women:
1. Each of the world divisions of the church is asked to discuss the issues in preparation for a meeting of representatives from the world divisions who will meet for four or five days beginning March 26, 1985.
2. Representatives will include at least two representatives from each of the world divisions of the church.
3. The report of the March meeting will be presented to the 1985 Spring Meeting (April 3 and 4, 1985) for recommendations to the 1985 General Conference Session.

In addition the church's Biblical Research Institute will send to all delegates to the General Conference Session "a balanced summary of the available theological positions in connection with this subject."

The Annual Council action stated that the "decision of the 1985 General Conference Session will be definitive and should be accepted as such by the Church worldwide."

General Conference President Neal C. Wilson reviewed recent history concerning the pastoral roles of Adventist women.

"It is clear scripture teaches equality of men and women," Wilson explained. "But we must face the question of whether that equality is one of both status and function." He pointed out that various church studies and actions of the last decade have urged continued study of the role of women in the church and have recognized the role of women in pastoral-ecclesiastical work with ministerial status.

"The implication of what we have done over the last ten years is that a time might come to ordain women to the gospel ministry but that the church above all desises unity."

C. E. Bradford, president of the church's North American Division, pointed out that the General Conference has encouraged conferences to employ women in ministry. "They have the same educational preparation as men. Several conferences have accepted them in pastoral roles. They have been taking their places with their male classmates on pastoral staffs."

Bradford urged the world leaders of the church to have sympathy and understanding. "North America has its challenges to face. If we are a world church, the entire church should be concerned with our problems."

President Wallace O. Cox of the Columbia Union Conference asked the world representatives to "look at all sides of the issue and ask the Lord to lead us to the correct conclusion."

President Ron M. Wishey of the Potomac Conference said a survey revealed that the conference's ministers supported their fellow women pastors. He said the question is a matter of conscience for the conference's executive committee. "Our women pastors feel their call to ministry just as deeply as every member of the clergy sitting here today," he said.

Former General Conference President Robert H. Pierson appealed for study of the Bible and of the Spirit of Prophecy (writings of church founder Ellen G. White), "not of what other churches are doing, not what radical liberals propose, not what proponents of the status quo urge. We must find the solution on our knees, and then move ahead as a united church."

The council earlier voted to reaffirm a 1975 Spring Meeting action on the "Role of Women in the Church" and established guidelines for the selection and ordination of women as local-church elders.

Beware of Gators

C. D. N. S.

You can bet that burglars think at least twice when thinking about blazing property owned by Julian Hillery in New Orleans. Fed up with three break-ins in a year, Hillery got the proper permits, built a small pool and hired new guards-five alligators.

During the day, the 4½ foot reptiles sleep, but at night they prowl the property, which consists of five family-run businesses in homes on the 1200 block of Magazine Street. "Beware of Alligators" signs are posted and Hillery carries liability insurance.

So far, no burglaries...

GARFIELD®
Sports Corner

Now that the magic of the Detroit Tigers’ season has worn off, it’s time for the bruskers, the dancers, and the leapers. Kirk Gibson, eat your heart out.

Although the NFL’s regular season is half over, this week starts the beginning of the real regular season. There is not a team in first place with more than a two-game lead, but with eight weeks to go, that’s not a bad position to be in.

Which team is the strongest? That is debatable. If we go by records, the Miami Dolphins are considered the best. Some dare to compare these Dolphins with the Dolphins of 1974 (better known as the year as the year of Richardson Nixon). Yet still there are other teams which can be considered tops in the league.

The San Francisco 49ers boast a 7-1 record. The 49ers don’t have a squad that is bursting with superstars, but they get the job done. Led by QB Joe Montana, the 49ers are the team to beat in the NFC West.

The Washington Redskins and the St. Louis Cardinals, yes the Cardinals, are tied for the top spot in the NFC East. It’s easy to predict that the ‘SKins will come out on top based solely on the past two years, but the Cards are a pretty potent group. It’ll be interesting down the stretch. And although many would like to, let’s not forget the Cowboys.

In the NFC Central, the Chicago Bears, behind Jim McMahon and Walter Payton, are sitting on top of their division at the midway point this season. Upcoming is a date with the World Champion Los Angeles Raiders, though. That match will surely put the young Bears up to the test of being a contending team. The Minnesota Vikings and the Green Bay Packers, previously considered to be the stronger teams in the Central Division, both are fairing poorly so far.

In football’s best division, the AFC West, Los Angeles and the Denver Broncos are locked in a 7-1 tie for first place. The only loss the Raiders have this season came at the hands of the Broncos. Think the black and silver want revenge? The only loss that the Broncos suffered came in a blowout at Chicago. The Broncos haven’t been able to beat the Bears in four years, though. The Seattle Seahawks are an awesome bunch themselves. Seattle would really be in the thick of things if they hadn’t lost Curt Warner to injury early in the season. Franco Harris’ past record won’t be enough to help their team. The Seahawks need him this year; unfortunately, he can only run out of bounds now.

The San Diego Chargers still have a great offensive attack despite losing Kellen Winslow to injury and Chuck Muncie to the drap ward. QB Dan Fouts is the anchor for this team, but as long as the Chargers score 40 points and give up 44, they’ll still lose. The Chargers have absolutely no defense...absolutely none. (The Kansas City Chiefs with Todd Blackledge are a team of the future and thus don’t fit in this article.)

The AFC Central is a joke. Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Houston are football’s version of baseball’s American League West division. Neither of these teams should go to the playoffs but one will. Stupid? You bet.

I’m sure everyone that is reading this article will not totally agree with me, but one thing is certain. Football does not get interesting until after week number 10. I don’t care how many times you like to see Washington beat Dallas; who cares until after week number 10? Chances are Miami will remain unbeaten, but who cares until after week number 10? A 10-1 record is much more impressive than an 8-0 record any day.

Now that the Fall Classic is done away with the Fall Guys are in full swing until the Super Bowl. The best teams will make it, and the best individuals will wind up watching it. It always happens that way. So take off Tigger cap and join the party, It’s a long way to spring training.

Blowing down is more than just a safer way to drive. It’s also a great way to save gas and money. You’ll get about 20 more miles from every tank of gas if you slow down from 70 to 55 mph on the highway. And that’s just one of the easy ways you can save gasoline.

Radial tires save you about 30 cents on every gallon. Keeping your tires properly inflated saves another 24¢ a gallon. And a well-tuned car can save you about 4¢ a gallon more.

Saving energy is easier than you think, and with the rising energy costs we’re facing today, it’s never been more important.

They're Here!

At the last Student Association Joker editor, Reg Rice, promised that within a week the Joker would be in the students’ hands. True to his word they were delivered on October 23, 1984. Most students found the Joker on their dormitory room beds.

The holdup was caused by printing delays at the press, late pictures from the Orlando Campus and various other complications.

The Joker has more information listed in it this year, but aside from the greater quantity of information the quality has been questioned. A notabaly grainy effect appears on the pictures which detracts from the overall look.

The candidates for Joker editor almost always promise a speedy publication. After a late production this year, next years candidates are sure to do the same.

Away From Campus...

Candidates Debate

President Reagan and Walter Mondale pounced each other in the second presidential debate Sunday, October 21. Mondale stated that President Reagan is an out-of-touch leader whose foreign policy has “humiliated” the United States. He also said, “I will keep as strong,” and as a result of the president’s policies in Central America, “We have been humiliated and our opponents are stronger.” Reagan reported in the debate that Mondale has a “record of weakness...that is second to none” on national defence and jabbed back at Mondale with the following statement: “It may come to Mr. Mondale’s surprise, but I am in charge.”

No claim of victory was made after the campaign by either challenger, but Vice President George Bush stated, “I think we just wrapped up four more years.”

Soviet Arms Control Shift

Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger said Sunday that the Foreign Minister of the U.S. will not “beg” of the United States to withdraw all of the new cruise and Pershing II missiles that have been deployed in Britain, Italy, and West Germany since last December. Shultz said that the official may have been suggesting “a little different stance,” and a moratorium on deployment of American missiles may be sufficient to get arms talks under way again.

Heavy Storms Ravage Mississippi Valley

Heavy thunderstorms ripped Sunday over the lower Mississippi Valley, causing tornados and dumping rain on parts of Texas and Louisiana that had been hit by storms the day before. Tornados touched down Sunday and other possible twisters were detected on radar, said the National Weather Service.

Planes Crash

Investigators looked through the wreckage of two small planes that crashed this weekend in Cheyenne, Wyoming. One official said that one factor for the accidents may have been the snowstorms that have ravaged the area the last week. A twin-engine Cessna crashed into a North Cheyenne home Saturday, killing a 2-year-old boy inside the house and injuring the four people aboard the aircraft. One passenger told a police officer that the wings had come off. Let’s hope that our mid-term grades are kinder to us than the weather has been lately.

It’s Rainin’ Again

Robert Jones

Well, how has your week been so far? I think we could all agree that “wet” describes it pretty well. Yes, once again thunderclouds and torrential rains have taken up residence over Collegedale. Here at Southern College the umbrella population is booming. The protective devices used at SC are not just limited to umbrellas. Swimming to class Monday morning, I was passed by students wearing everything from plastic trashbags to full length trenchcoats. Umbrellas, however, are the predominant species. Umbrellas are available at the Campus Shop in three styles. These styles include a collapsible and non-collapsible variety—both of which are water proof. For those of you who are dating or have more than one friend, a selection of large golfer’s umbrellas are in stock. “Style” number three comes in the above mentioned varieties but is not water proof! Ignorant of this important difference and having the good luck I usually do, I bought one that wasn’t water resistant. Yes, I got soaked the first time I used my umbrella. Realizing the error of my ways, I returned to the Campus Shop. Many other students had made the same mistake and were carefully reading umbrella labels to avoid a second bath.

For those of you who find rain a nuisance, I would like to point out the following. Did you know that walking in the rain at SC can be a new social experience? Yes, some romances have been started—believe it or not—by a chivalric gentleman (obviously not a Talge Hall resident), offering a damsel in distress a space beneath his canopy. Believe me, it happens. Ask my fiancée, the first time I “ran into her” was during a thunderstorm.

As if the rain and wind weren’t enough to deal with, we’ve also got to navigate around puddles, which can be an adventure in itself. Of course, the term puddle is a relative one. I think “lake” would best describe the amount of water that collects at the bottom of the steps between Wright Hall and Talge Hall.

In fact, I had a personal close encounter with this body of water Monday afternoon. Somehow falling into a muddy puddle can really chip away at one’s dignity. I’m still waiting for my sneakers to dry out.

Yes, the rainy season has again hit Collegedale and though uncomfortable we’ll all survive. Contrary to what residents of Thatcher Hall think, they will not melt no matter how much rain we get.

The final exam for evening classes will be during exam week at the time the class normally meets.

NOTES:
1. Students with more than three exams in one day may seek to have an exam rescheduled. See the academic dean if it can't be worked out with the instructors involved.
2. Because the Christmas recess is starting a week earlier than normal to accommodate those going to the Mexico City Youth Congress, students should not expect special exam arrangements to accommodate holiday travel.
3. Beginning with the next semester the examination schedule will be printed in the class schedule so that students may plan the exam week along with the schedule of classes.

U.S. Senate Hopeful Ashe Visits Southern

Victor Ashe, candidate for the United States Senate, arrived unannouncedly in front of Wright Hall at 10:00 a.m. on October 30, 1984. His brief, 20 minute stop at Southern College was one in a series of stops during Ashe's final campaign swing through western Tennessee. Ashe appeared very much at ease when he arrived and throughout the course of his visit. The tour of the campus was accompanied by a small delegation of students with SA President Sim an as the host. One of Ashe's aids was overheard saying that Victor Ashe had only gotten 1 1/2 hours of sleep the night before.

Attorney, native of Knoxville, fifth generation Tennessean, Mr. Ashe started his career in public service working for Senator Howard Baker. A veteran Senate, Victor consistently won reelection with 60 to 70 percent margins. He recently won the 1984 Republican Primary by an overwhelming 87 percent of the vote. President Ronald Reagan briefly states, "We need Victor Ashe in the U.S. Senate." In Washington, Victor claims he will work for a balanced federal budget that is fair and the continuation of President Reagan's economic policies. More jobs for Tennessee is a primary concern to Victor, and he plans to have a staff person working full-time to bring business and industry to Tennessee.

Victor Ashe's Democratic opponent, Albert Gore, has been shown to be currently ahead in professional polls, but Ashe doesn't think that these polls are a correct reflection of the public opinion. Ashe claims to have won a number of polls in high schools and even on the elementary school level and claims that this is a good indicator of what the parents at home are thinking. This coming Tuesday Victor Ashe will have a chance to prove his logic correct.

While visiting at Southern, Ashe was posed a number of questions. One of the questions raised was on Ashe's stand on higher education to which Ashe replied, "My wife is a second grade school teacher." Ashe went on to state that he was for higher education and felt that there was a strong role for private colleges to play in education and that we should not take on any governmental activity that would inhibit that role.

A number of questions were directed towards Ashe which questioned what could be done to better private schools. One such question focused on tax credits for private colleges of which Ashe thought to be a justifiable expenditure. He stated, however, that the federal deficit has not come down and that such tax credits at this time would not be beneficial in balancing the budget which Ashe strongly supports a Constitutional Amendment for. When voting for a candidate a voter likes to know who else supports the candidate. One such question was asked to Ashe and he replied "I have the support of Governor Alexander and the support of President Reagan. In fact, if you have ever seen my latest television commercials, you'll see that the President is featured in them."

Ashe responded to a host of other questions which for the most part he had ready responses to. The one question which he said he had never been confronted with before was on President Reagan's appointment of an ambassador to the Vatican. Ashe stated that he would have to look over the reasons and issues before he could take a stand on it, but he did say "I am a firm believer in separation of Church and State."

At the end of his stay Ashe entered his car for another campaign stop in Dayton, Tennessee. He initiated the suggestion that win or lose he might be able to make another stop at Southern and address a larger number of the student body.

Jerry Clower Show Sells Out

Cindy Clower

The Jerry Clower Show this Saturday night has proven to be a real seller. From the sounds of it, Clower will also be a real thriler.

Tickets were sold out by Monday morning, five whole days before the show. Unlike prior programs in the Artist Adventure Series, only those with tickets will be admitted. Of the 2200 plus tickets, half have been given to alumni who are on campus for this year's Homecoming and the other half given to students or sold to community members.

The fast sell-out is no surprise through Clower, named "Country Comic of the Year" for nine years running, is in popular demand. Each year he makes about two hundred appearances. In the month of October alone, he has traveled from Florida to California, to Virginia and North Carolina, to Georgia and back to Florida.

Clower's stories of life in Amite County, Mississippi, have taken him to several appearances at The Grand Ole Opry. Besides his numerous television commercials, Clower has produced 15 records and 2 books. "Ain't God Good!" and "Let the Hammer Down."

Fall Festival Ends With Barn Party

Lori Heineman

Hooray for Fall Festival! weekend of opportunity, S.C. students had the opportunity to blow off steam and tension from mid-term exams and show their spirit and enthusiasm during Fall Festival weekend, October 24 through 28. One student-dent said this was "a chance to see who all the fun people are by the ways that they dress up... especially with the imagination shown by some of the costumes worn at the barn party Sunday night."

This "dress-up" weekend began on Wednesday with "Scrub-clothes, factory-togs and T-shirt with a Message Day." Thursday consisted of "Country Western Day" and a Country Jamboree picnic for supper. Everyone dressed elegantly or super-preppy on Friday and then displayed their costumes Sunday night at the barn party.

As a whole, the students enjoyed this dress-up occasion. Dale Lauer suggests we include a hot day and an inside out day, and Kelly Hosier would like to see more students and faculty participating.

taken of the festival participants on the steps of Lynn Wood Hall. I asked the people gathered around the following:

"What do you think of Fall Festival?" Here are some of their replies.

"I'd like to know where Bruce Kennedy gets his clothes!"-Mark Hamblon.

"Really nice-fun participating in it."-Dorothy Dalton.

"A unique week...hey that rhymes!"-Tami Peters.

In Memory of Scott

I was in a dazed state after I got off the phone on a Wednesday afternoon: one of my best friends, Scott Yankelevitz died. To those who never had the opportunity to meet him, they missed one of the rare pleasures there are to be had. When I boarded the train I thought the right response would be to cry, but after thinking hard, I said to myself that Scott would have said his famous line, "Go with the flow!" At the time, I thought in my head sounded very cold and morbid, but pondering it more I reckoned in my mind that Scott died doing something he very much enjoyed. I hold no contempt for that skateboard, because we had talked about when we went--whether it was 'takin' a drive to Trenion,' or talkin' about the Redskins, we figured that when the time came, we'd be enjoying something. "Go with the flow!" was our statement to an anxious, and stress burdened world. Scott was happiest when he was wearing his shark shorts and shooting basketball. He was not a great friend that could be done outdoors. Our conversations would get serious once in a while, and they would last for only a few minutes and then the talk would turn to livin' a Bohemian lifestyle on the beach in California or talk of hoping the cafeteria would be serving biscuits and gravy, our favorite breakfast dish while at Southern. If nothing were said between us, it wasn't that something was wrong, it was that everything was perfect. Scott was a great friend, he would always try to help you out with money, his car, or just listening. I know that eventually I'll break down and cry, but before I do this much has to be said.

If you must, I know I will, but if you can help it at all, and can hold it back, and think of surfing, basketball, girls, and the Washington Redskins. When you do, you'll be holding his memory better than tears could ever express. "Go with the flow!"

SM Writes Home

Dear Editor,

Yesterday I received 17 letters, and the first 2 copies of The Accent (thanks to La Ronde Cuire-an excellent SM club president) were among them.

I am working this year as the teacher (8 grades) and pastor for the tiny little island of Namu-Namau (no, Mork from Ork doesn't live here). I am the only American here and have no contact with the rest of the world other than my short wave radio receiver and the mail boat that comes one a month or so. As you might expect, I am thrilled to receive all the mail and especially The Accent.

I certainly agree with your first editorial: "We're Talkin' Proud." Our school does have a lot to be proud of. But you left out one item on your list of things to be proud of... "We're talkin' proud of a super performance and an excellent job on the Southern Accent this year!"

My hat is off to you and your staff for an excellent beginning! Keep it up! A warm "Yok we" greeting to all of my friends at S.C. Please continue to write, and to pray for me!

Sincerely,

Reflections

WHAT DID YOU LEARN IN SCHOOL TODAY

Jerry Morgan

My father never finished high school. Due to the economy of the times and the fact that he was the only son in a family of seven sisters, he went to work for his father and never returned to school. That is not to say that his education ended then. In fact he was an avid reader, active in the local Methodist Debating League, and because he was a typesetter and proofreader in the printing business, could spot a misspelled word or a split infinitive like a skilled grammarian. He therefore took intense interest in the higher education of each of his children.

Often, at the supper table, he would ask me, "What did you learn in school today?" I had learned through experience to avoid the response "nothing" as that would incur a look of profound disbelief and disappointment. "Nothing? You sat for seven hours in a classroom and learned nothing?" Invariably I found that if I thought hard enough I could think of something. "Well, the mature porcupine has some 30,000 quills on its head, back, flanks, and tail." or "The plant looks like a plant and the flower looks like a flower."

If it seemed that only a few years had passed until I completed high school, finished college, and was back teaching the same school, trying to make neuroses and adverbs exciting to a generation who found them as irrelevant as I once did, it was during that first year that our superintendent gave me an update on my father's philosophy. "You have three students in your school for almost a thousand hours each year. What are you going to teach them?" I found it significant that in most classrooms teachers ask about 90 percent of the questions and answer most of these themselves. I also noticed that I seemed to learn more from teaching than I ever did when I was a student in the same discipline.

Several years ago David Berkowitz, the notorious "Son of Sam" killer, was arrested in New York City. Prior to his arrest he sent notes to the police explaining why he had committed the murders and that he planned to kill again. In examining these notes one psychologist noticed that Berkowitz knew how to use a cliché correctly, something that most of the population cannot do. (A semi-colon joins two independent clauses that are not joined by a co-ordinate conjunction) He amazed me that at some point he had been a student in a classroom somewhere and had learned this profound piece of information but somehow had not been impressed with the rights of others and the golden rule, that some teacher had drilled home points of grammar and composition and had not seen the signs of a disturbed mind crying out for help.

It has been said that education is what you have left when you've forgotten everything you've learned in school. While this definition may seem contradictory at first, it does contain the sad truth that many of us retain little of what we learn. Although we graduate from college at the end of four (or more) years and have the diploma hanging in a prominent place on the wall, when it comes right down to it, we retain very little of all we have learned or "crammed" during our college years.

A well-known cubist does a routine which he calls his "five minute college program." He begins with the premise that because we forget most of what we learn in college we can save a lot of time and money if we eliminate those facts that we will forget anyway and just learn the very basics of each course, those facts that we won't forget. It goes something like this:

Economics—Supply and demand. You sell something for more than you paid for it—that's called profit and it's all that's really important in economics.

Spanish—Since most people speak English today or they know someone who does, you can save yourself a lot of time and study by only speaking to those people. Two sentences in Spanish are all you really need to know: "Habla Ud. inglés?" (Do you speak English?) If they say "no" or ask, "Conoce Ud. a alguien que habla inglés?" (Do you know anyone who does?)

Theology—Only two questions are important: "Where is God?" (Everywhere) and "Why is God everywhere?" (Because He's omnipresent.)

Algebra—You'll never use it so forget it.

Geometry—Just as important as Algebra.

While his five minute course would no doubt anger most educators (especially those who disciplines were reduced to a sentence or two) the sad truth is that most of us who complete a college program remember almost nothing outside of our major fields. This is not because it was unimportant, but because we never took the time to use what we'd learned in these "electives."

I personally look back on my own college program with a lot of regret. Not because I chose the wrong field or attended the wrong college but because I didn't learn so much more than I did. Like many students I was so anxious to finish the program and get on with life that the four years seemed to pass like one. There were courses I should have taken as electives (astronomy was one of them) that would have been so much more beneficial than some I took because it gave me an easier schedule or an easier grade. However, like most others, I've realized the education doesn't have to end with graduation; it just takes greater discipline to achieve it afterwards.

Incidentally, did you know that a woodchuck breathes only ten times per hour while hibernating? An active woodchuck breathes 2,100 times an hour. (Now you can say that you've learned something new in school today.)
In Memory of Scott

Jerry Russell

"Endless days barefoot on the beach, Susan that spirit runs free."

—Scott J. Yankelovitz

Sitting in my room, staring at the ceiling, thinking, remembering the good and bad of my friend who was so much a part of my life.

I'll never forget Scott for the contribution he made to my life and his optimistic attitude that greatly inspired every day.

He was warm and sensitive, having a taste of humor that always brought out the deepest despair.

I remember that one last year I had what seemed an insurmountable problem that had me down for several weeks. Every day Scott spent hours talking with me, encouraging and helping me to deal with it. After that there were many more times that Scott and I would just sit and talk because it felt so good to reason things out. In all the times that we talked, I never saw Scott get angry. He just didn't get angry. You always could count on Scott to react the same way to a shy grin, raised eyebrows, and a little nod of the head.

Friday afternoons were always special to us. After classes were over, Scott, Rob, and I would jump into the 700 LDS with the top down and cruise over to the pool to lay out or into town for the afternoon. We especially enjoyed these times because it was the "boys'" afternoon out. Scott would be decked out in those shorts, a T-shirt with a surfing logo, and his raggedy vans—the look that just epitomized his life style.

Scott was kind of a free spirit, while at the same time organized enough to be an "A" student. To say he loved the beach would be an understatement. Last summer while at home, I didn't even bother to try to see Scooter on weekends because very few of them went by that he wasn't in Ocean City. He always said that it was the "best bench in the Continental United States." There he would be on the sand during "peak tanning hours."

Scott had many good qualities, and he touched our lives in countless ways, but the one characteristic I admired the most was his unfailing dedication to his friends. On several occasions when people had said negative things about one of his friends, each time he came to our rescue and defended us at any cost to himself. This was a quality of Scott's that I always appreciated and wished I had the guts to do myself.

Through it all Scott was one of the greatest guys and certainly one of the best friends I've ever had. There will always be an empty place in my heart that can never be filled by anyone else. I, along with many other friends, consider myself very fortunate and honored to have known him.

His silent influence and leadership brought me through many trials.

I can praise God for I'm going to see Scooter again, however. Resurrection morning now takes a new meaning for me. That day will put to an end an era of pain and suffering, and begin a new one of "endless days hereafter" by the Sea of Glass where "that spirit" can run free.

Good-bye Scotty. We love you.

Senator Begins Forming Plans

Sheila Elwin

With the October 24 Senate meeting having been postponed because of the accident to Scott Yankelovitz last week, a special October 29 meeting was held last week. The meeting was held this week. It began with the Pledge of Allegiance, followed by a devotional by Senator Elwin.

The position of Secretary Loundi, who was sick, was temporarily filled by Senators Jobe and Reihardt.

A special update from Terry Clandell, Director of Strawberry Festival, plans are going better than in previous years. Clandell explained that this is due in part to a larger staff of approximately 30 people, including 18 photographers.

The Festival will include many special events and graphics: pictures will move faster; the music will have a slightly more up-beat tempo; and some of the music will be originally composed by students.

Another definite improvement over years past is the actual showing. The gym will be arranged crosswise rather than lengthwise, allowing everyone to sit in from of the equipment. Afterwards, President Shin announced the presence of Victor Ashe, Republican Senatorial candidate, on campus around 10:30 a.m., Oct. 30, for any who wish to meet him.

Also, Shim gave the newest updated title—this Thursday at noon—for "the surprise" in the cafeteria.

Due to appropriate student concern over cafeteria pricing, Senator Denton proposed to send an official delegate to Earl Eaves, cafeteria director, to ask him pertinent questions and then publish his answers.

Senator Blass introduced two ideas which his committee has come up with for Senate project. These are a book device gathering for the library and a lighted student information sign for the cafeteria. Nothing is definite, though, and all are welcome to add their thoughts.

Senator adjourned after Vice President Palsgrove reminded the senators of the next regular meeting, Nov. 5.

Note: Unless otherwise posted, all senate meetings are open for anyone to go and listen. If you wish to personally present an idea, please make arrangements with your senator.

Record New SDA Members

NADCA

Record numbers of people are joining the Seventh-day Adventist Church, General Conference President Neal C. Wilson reported in his October 9 keynote address to the church's 1984 Annual Council.

"Through the first seven quarters of the church's 1,000 Days of Reaping campaign, nearly 666,000 people have joined," Wilson explained.

"The exact figure is 1,034 baptisms per day.

The campaign goal is 1,000 new members per day for 1,000 days beginning during the fall of 1982 and ending at the church's General Conference Session in New Orleans in the summer of 1983. Wilson said the church expects to report more than 1.1 million new members at the New Orleans meeting.

Pointing to area of strong church growth, Wilson said the Inter-American Division hopes to have a membership of 900,000 by mid-1985. He said the Mexican Union, which has a membership of approximately 20,000 fifteen years ago, will have 200,000 members by the end of 1984.

Wilson said the largest union—the East African Union with more than 200,000 members—has even bigger spiritual objectives before them. He said an additional 13 union conferences have more than 100,000 members—four in the Inter-American Division, two in the Far Eastern Division, two in the North American Division, one in the Africa-Indian Ocean Division and three in the South American Division.

"What hath God wrought!" Wilson concluded. "Let's renew our covenant with God," he said. "Let's review His mighty acts and His ability to save. Let's extol the goodness and greatness of God. Let's be a peculiar people, a called-out people, an instrument in God's hand to every nation, kindred, tongue and people."

"Let's respond to God's warnings and exaltation to His people to obey His law," he continued. "Let's recognize the place of true worship and study of God's Word as a path of unity of faith and action that will eliminate so many of the peripheral issues that take up so much of our time and energy. And let's accept God's promise of blessings and rewards for those who observe His covenant."

The Annual Council agenda contained such diverse subjects as reports and proposals on the administration and use of tithe funds, a statement of theological freedom and accountability, the pastoral role of women, the publishing work in North America, Sabbath observance, the role and function of denominational organizations, the President's Review Commission Report—Phase II and a personnel Information data bank, as well as the General Conference's 1985 world budget.

The Council met through October 16 and is being followed by two days of meetings of the North American Division Committee on Administration.
Dr. Greenleaf Talks About 1951-52 Accent

Ron Aguilara

Besides having the first Accent editor, Dr. Frances Andrews, Southern College also has a faculty member who was the Accent editor 33 years ago: Dr. Floyd Greenleaf. Dr. Greenleaf is a professor in our History Department.

Dr. Greenleaf graduated from SMC in 1953 with a double major in history and religion with an emphasis on teaching. He later received his masters in social science from George Peabody College for Teachers, which is now the Vanderbilt School of Education. In 1976, he completed his Ph.D. from the University of Tennessee, emphasizing in Latin American History. He is currently completing a 3 volume work on Adventism in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Dr. Greenleaf, who had always been interested in journalism and who had been both a reporter and assistant editor, became editor in the 1951-52 school year.

One of the problems the paper faced then was that the Accent did not carry advertisements. One may ask, how did the paper operate without advertisements? Dr. Greenleaf tells us that the paper's budget came from selling subscriptions. With the Accent coming out every two weeks, he recalls that they were reasonably successful that year. They needed 4000 subscriptions and ended up a little short. However, they did not publish the last issue that year to balance out the budget.

One of the major problems of the Accent back then was that it did not have any trained writers. "It was hard to find competent news article writers who were trained," says Dr. Greenleaf.

In 1951-52 there were about 400-500 students on the campus. Everyone knew everybody and there was a feeling of togetherness. Also, the academy was on the same campus as the college and the academy and college students lived together in the dorms. Because of this the Southern Accent had a section, "Accent on the Academy," for the academy activities.

Dr. Greenleaf says that he had two sources of copy. First of all, he kept his eyes peeled for new stories. Secondly, staff columnists were assigned a certain area of campus. In his year Dr. Greenleaf had four columnists cover the men's dorm, women's dorm, married students, and faulty. One can see that there was more of a personal feeling in the Accent 33 years ago.

Also, one notices that the Southern Accent has changed in both its format and production. With more students, more offered majors, and more faculty, the newspaper has more sources of material. Also, it has expanded to eight pages in contrast to four pages in 1951-52. The changes make for an improved paper, but today's staff doubt if they would have taken the job of putting a weekly paper out under the circumstances which Dr. Greenleaf faced.

Death for Teague

The Tennessee Supreme Court has upheld the Hamilton County Criminal Court jury's ruling of death by electrocution for Raymond Eugene Teague. The 25-year-old Teague was convicted of drowning his ex-wife in her bathtub April 4, 1980. His attorney states that Teague has not yet been advised of the ruling because he wishes to first study it before deciding on appeals.

Mondale Warns U.S. in TV Ad

The Mondale campaign put a 5-minute ad on national television Sunday, presenting the election as a referendum on arms control. The ad was televised on all three commercial networks and included footage of young children combined with shots of missiles, a nuclear blast, and shots of the "Red telephone" a president would use to respond to a nuclear attack. Mondale says "We know if those bombs go off, its probably the end. It's over."

Job Rate Falling

Unemployment in the Chattanooga area fell to a precensus low of 7 percent last month. Employment Security commissioner Thomas Young said, "We have a rapidly expanding work force, and new job opportunities are growing at an even faster pace. These are signs of a very healthy economy." The Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce records the city's larger trade area has not posted an unemployment rate as low as 7 percent since December of 1980.

A Colony on Mars

Harrison Schmitt, a former moon-walking astronaut, said a Soviet attempt to put cosmonauts in the vicinity of Mars by October 1992 "is not only possible, it's highly probable." Schmitt called a settlement on Mars "the first great adventure for humankind of the next thousand years."

Baby Fae Improving

Baby Fae, the infant who received a transplanted baboon's heart was removed from a respirator Monday. Doctors stated that they did not know the heart of a 2-month-old human heart was available the day of the operation but said that it was to large anyway for the 14-day-old infant. By late Tuesday morning she had become the longest-surviving human recipient of a cross-species heart transplant.

First Christmas Seals Are In The Mail

"The first Christmas Seals of the 1984 Christmas Seal Campaign have been placed in the mail," states William F. Basse, Executive Director of the American Lung Association of Tennessee—The Christmas Seal People. A total of 50 million households around the United States will receive their annual Seals this holiday season, including approximately 1,000,000 in Tennessee.

The Christmas Seal Campaign is an American holiday tradition that dates back 77 years, was begun to help stamp out tuberculosis, which was then the number-one killer in this nation and so rampant it was called the White Plague.

Today, contributions to Christmas Seals are the primary support of the American Lung Association and its 144 affiliated Associations throughout the nation. It is the only campaign of its size supported by small contributions from many Americans of all ages, in all walks of life and every economic bracket.

Local Lung Associations are active in campaigns of smoking cessation. More than 350,000 premature deaths are attributed to smoking. In addition, more than 2.5 million persons suffer from emphysema and 7.9 million have chronic bronchitis.

Some respiratory illnesses are treatable with proper medical care combined with self-help, according to the American Lung Association of Tennessee, which is active in asthma self-management education programs for youngsters and adults.

Christmas Seals also support medical research and in-school health education for youngsters from primary-grade age through their teens. Other activities include action against air pollution and occupational lung hazards.

The American Lung Association—The Christmas Seal People say: "Take care of your lungs. They're only human."

Where's The School Spirit

Reinhold Smith

Last summer I visited my best friend in Atlanta, and on my way there I stopped in Lincoln, Nebraska, where I was living at the time. I stopped in College to visit Dr. John Wagner. For those of you who know Dr. Wagner, you probably realize that with his trusting smile and friendly outstretched hand, he could probably sell you your own car.

Well, I had been out of school a year and a half, had taken my job, and was basically bored. To make a long story short, within twenty minutes he sold me on going back to school, and six weeks later I was here.

I arrived on campus Friday night or Sabbath morning, depending on how you view 2:00 a.m. After having been sold on how nice students at Southern College were, the first person I had contact with was the desk worker at Taadeher Hall. What a grouch!

I was excited to be here and asked what the thought of the school, and if she liked it here. Well, I can't repeat exactly what she said, but it wasn't nice. Of course, one person's opinion didn't really affect mine, but I did stand there and think that this was bad Public Relations for a dorm employee.

The next person I met was a desk worker (Angela Saunders), but this time I had a very positive experience, and today she is a wonderful friend. So by now your probably asking yourself, what is the point of this article? School spirit! I love Southern College; we should be proud to be students at an institution where the administration, staff, and teachers care enough to want to be your friends. I've been to L.U., W.C., and Unco and have never encountered such a caring, Christian administration such as I've seen here.

Southern College has the finest President and Dean of Students that a college could hope for. I can't think of two finer Christian men anywhere. This campus is beautiful and so are the buildings and landscaping.

I feel sick inside everytime I hear someone say how bad the school is. This is a great school, and the bottom line is, we are "The School." If you don't like it here, you're one of the few people who don't. Like anything else, schools is school as we students make it.

Tomorrow when you see a stranger, say "Hi." When you see a true friend, give them a hug—they just might really need it. After your next class, tell your teacher, "Hey, I appreciate you. Thanks for being my friend as well as my teacher." And last, but certainly not least, when you see an administrator (President, dean, division head, etc.), shake their hand and thank them for a fine school. Let's get fired-up, be proud to be a student at... whatever they decide to call it.

November Is... E. O. Grundset

"All the gorgeous leaves of early autumn now turned a nondescript decaying brown piled up on lawns and gardens, being raked systematically, slowly, coarsely, lazily, expeditiously, easily, or conclusively (depending on the mood of the raker).

"The election and politicking over at last—the people have spoken (epistemically speaking) and the governments (national, state, county, and city) are seemingly in safe hands for the next few years—and we can only wonder what the newsmakers will now find to analyze and dispute (not to mention all the polemics). The nation is sighing in collective relief that the oratory has finally stopped;

"Canada Goose hoinking their way south and long irregular skins of Sandhill Cranes circling high overhead on bright crisp days, and all the winter visitors (White-throated Sparrows, Dark-eyed Juncos, Purple Finches, Pine Siskins) suddenly flocking to our backyard feeders—right on cue;

Religion Center Is Dedicated

The Religion Center was dedicated last Friday, November 2, as the opening meeting for this year's Alumni Weekend, the dedication service was well attended by both alumni of Southern Junior College—So-Ju-Conians—and current students, despite a light but constant drizzle.

On the platform were seated Abigail Seay, one of the organizers of the dedication; Dr. John Wagner, President of Southern College; Al McClure, President of the Southern Union; William Taylor, Director of the Endowment Fund Campaign; Dr. Jack McClarty, Director of Development; Dr. Gordon Hyde, Chairman of the Division of Religion; and Robert Pierson, former President of the General Conference, were just a few of these men.

Jesse Cowdrick, a loyal supporter of Southern College and distinguished for his work both in the church and in the public sector, made the presentation of So-Ju-Conian Hall and after the acceptance by Al McClure, Jr., Gary Patterson, John McClure, Sr., and Robert Pierson gave the dedicatory address for the prayer student to spend. Following came the introduction of the traditional cutting of the ribbon.

The Religion Center, formerly Miller Hall, will now be called So-Ju-Conian Hall. The name was chosen because the So-Ju-Conians have made its renovation their project for this year. After the renovations are through, the hall will be complete with a chapel, faculty offices, classrooms, and a Heritage Room which will hold the SDA Library.

During the ceremony, the landscaping was commenced with the planting of a tree from Graysville, the original home of Southern Junior College. Other parts of the landscaping will be a Garden of Prayer, a sun dial, and a fountain.

A special part of the service, which was not put in the plans, was the making of Dr. Jack McClarty an honorary So-Ju-Con. Although not old enough to be an actual So-Ju-Conian, Dr. McClarty's leadership and work in behalf of the organization is very much appreciated.

The dedication service ended with a tour of the facilities.

Weekend Features Southern Union Gymnastics Show

A gymnastics show Saturday night at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists will culminate a two-day southern states gymnastics workshop on the Collegedale campus.

Gymnastics teams from participating schools will perform routines beginning at 8 p.m. in the Physical Education Center. Blue Holm of Chattanooga, former circus performer and now coach at the Tennessee Academy of Gymnastics, is assisting throughout the workshop and will also participate on Saturday night.

Over 300 representatives from 17 secondary schools ranging from Miami to Centralla, Missouri, and Hamburg, Pennsylvania, will be on the college campus Thursday and Friday for an intensive airport clinic.

Steve Elliot, a top world-class aircraft from the University of Nebraska, is the master clinician for the workshop. He is world champion in floor routine and trampoline. Due to an injury incurred while performing in Japan, he will be coaching here rather than performing, according to Ted Evans. Mr. Evans is workshop director and assistant professor in the Division of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation at Southern College.

FM 90.5 Conducts Classic Celebration

Todd Parrish
Non-commercial, fine arts radio station FM90.5 WSMC will conduct its Classic Celebration November 10-20. The "Celebration" is the public radio station's annual fund drive to generate financial support from its listeners for the coming year.

Each year this listener support is needed to keep programs like NPR's "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered," "Adventures In Good Music with Karl Haas," "Firing Line," "Monitoradio," "Business Times," the Philadelphia Orchestra, San Francisco, the Chicago Symphony, New Releases, the Chattanooga Symphony, and Noontime on FM90.5's airwaves.

"As a result of our previous drive we maintained most of the programs you enjoy and even acquired a few new ones," says general manager Glenn Perry. "We also installed lighting protection devices at our transmitter site." Perry forecasts several plans for the coming fiscal year. First, funds collected from listeners during the Classic Celebration will be used to maintain the broadcast of programs the public wants to hear and keep the station on the air each day for another year. Secondly, Perry says, FM90.5 must soon replace an aging production console and two tape recorders. This need alone will cost $20,000. FM90.5 is the oldest non-commercial radio station in Chattanooga—on the air since 1981. It joined National Public Radio as a charter member in 1970, and it was the first radio station in a seven-state region to acquire satellite-receiving capability in 1980.

Program director Todd Parrish urges the public to call or write in their pledges for the Classic Celebration early. "With everybody pitching in we can celebrate another full year of high-quality programs and hopefully reduce the number of on-air interruptions during your favorite programs.

The event will officially begin at 9 p.m. November 10, and the telephone number to make a tax-deductible contribution during the Classic Celebration is (615) 395-2230.
Go Ahead, Procrastinate!

What do you have to do tonight? If you're a typical student you probably have to study for a quiz, start preparing for a test, finish an assignment, and begin to wonder how many Sundays you have left before your research project needs to be turned in. If you are an unusual student you are ready for a quiz, have been reading your book all along so you don't need to study for a test, finished your assignment in class while the teacher was lecturing, and had your research project done three days after the teacher assigned it. Now which student's shoes would you rather be in?

I would rather be the first student. It really bothers me to be part of such a fast paced society. I'm not the type to study ten hours every day, be in six clubs, be an RA in the dorm, and be class president all at the same time. Sure those things are nice, but one at a time! I sometimes find myself running pretty fast (people to go, places to see, things to do), but then I stop and ask myself "for what?" It sometimes depresses me when I think of life as a secular person might look at it. I'm going to college, so I can get a good job, so I can raise a family, so I can send them to college, so they can get a good job, so they can raise a family... You get the picture?

What has happened to our world in the last one hundred years? We have become advanced in technology, computers have entered the scene, transportation has changed incredibly, communication is lightning fast. They call this progress. I call it a tragic waste. I would like to visit grandma in her home and wagon and live in the forest. I guess I'd like to live with the Amish. When society is so fast paced that we began to lose sight of why we're moving so fast, it's time to slow down.

I have a research paper due in a couple of weeks. I haven't begun work on it yet. I'll probably stay up till 3 a.m. the night before the due date. But I don't have time to do it before then. There are some people that need to be visited, a friend that needs to be talked to, a date to go on, a football game to play. I'll get old, friends will move, people will die, and I don't want to be a person that says I should have played that game, made more friends, visited that person. No, I want to feel that I've lived a rewarding life. So go ahead, procrastinate!

SUPPORT APPRECIATED

Dear Editor

I would like to thank the administration, faculty, and especially Dean Schiltz and Mr. Spears for their support, two weekends ago. You really helped make rough times a little bit easier for us all. Thank you for the help and true Christian example.

Sincerely,

Robert Lord
P.S. SURFS UP, so catch some tasty waves.

Happy Birthday President Wagner!

Last week during the November 1, Thursday lunch hour the "surprise" that originally had been part of the Fall Festival activities materialized. But rather than the student body being the recipients of the surprise, our President, Dr. John Wagner, was the receiver of it. A surprise birthday party, with a birthday cake and gift included, was thrown for him in the cafeteria. Those students who eat at 12:00 were privileged to have a slice of the large birthday cake and to watch Dr. Wagner's reactions as he opened his gift. Compliments of the Southern College Student Association, the President was given a "Chicago Pneumatic 1.5 inch Impact Wrench." In appreciation for the "pleasant surprise," Dr. Wagner wishes to thank both the student body and the SA, "What a neat surprise!" he says, "Thnak you so very much for the kind words, cards, and 'just right' gift. I'm thankful for the privilege of serving here at SC and having so many great students and faculty. Thank you!"

Blood Assurance Drive Continues

Joel Negron

Southern College has held of a good thing. But many students here do not realize the importance or do not even know about the free "insurance plan" they receive through Blood Assurance.

Blood Assurance has given and will continue to provide life-sustaining blood free, to any student who might someday need blood, if 25 percent or more of the student body donates blood. In addition, donor's immediate family are also covered for one year. Back in 1970, when Blood Assurance was first formed, the need was seen to 1promote the recruitment of enough healthy volunteer blood donors to eventually cover all the needs of the school and area 2) provide the knowledge, the professional skill and the equipment to ensure citizens the safest blood possible. Since its founding, over 100,000 citizens are covered through individual, family, and group

I Deserve Better

Gordon Bietz

A parable, if you please: Once upon a time there was a great preacher who died. He went to St. Peter at the pearly gates to gain entrance to heaven and found, when he arrived, that there was a long line of people waiting in front of St. Peter’s desk. St. Peter seemed to be taking his time in talking to the people. The great preacher was very impatient. I could organize this line better than this; why, I could get these people taken care of in no time, he thought to himself.

He went to the head of the line to talk to St. Peter and was told by the helping angels to go back and wait in line. "This is ridiculous," he told the angel that was by him, near the back of the line. "Why, when I was on the earth I never waited in lines. I had secretaries and church members to do things for me. My church was better organized than this." The angel smiled and said nothing.

Mr. Great Preacher began looking around at the people in line with him. He hadn’t noticed them before. Most of them were obviously poor people. Many were not dressed in clothes as nice as his, and some of them looked like folks he had seen on earth waiting in line for a handout. Some of the people were obviously very uneducated. It became obvious to him that there had been some mistake—he must be in the wrong line.

He went up to the front of the line again to ask whether this weren’t the wrong line. "Don’t you have a line for those of us who have been Christians all our lives? I mean, it is obvious that some of those in this line are latecomers to the cause. Do you know how long I have preached this message? I have preached to hundreds and thousands. Certainly you have a faster line where the registration procedures are not so long—a line for the full-timers.

He was politely told that he was in the right line. So he returned to his place. He was getting more and more impatient at how things were being handled, and most important, how he was being handled.

He managed to waitrather impatiently for about fifteen minutes until he noticed that St. Peter was not even calling people in order that they were standing in line. He didn’t do anything until an obviously very unimportant man was called to the head of the line. The man had been standing behind him. This was too much. He simply was not used to being so overlooked—and after all his work! Why, most of the people going in front of him didn’t have one tenth the knowledge of heaven and theology that he had. And he was sure that they hadn’t converted as many people as he had. In his frustration he suddenly saw another line. Funny, he thought to himself, why didn’t I see that before?

From where he was standing, the line looked as if it was moving more rapidly, and people in it looked much more distinguished. He quickly switched lines.

One of the angels there recognized him immediately and said, "Why, Mr. Great Preacher, it certainly is our pleasure to have you here. You are too important to stand in line—let me usher you to the head of the line."

Why, this is more like it, Mr. Great Preacher thought to himself.

At the front of the line he was given a lot of the attention he was used to. He was moved quickly through registration—so quickly, in fact, that he hardly knew what he was signing. A very attentive, flattering angel ushered him through a large door. He was so gratified with the attention he was given by the angels in this line that he didn’t even notice the sign over the door he went through. It read, "Hell."

Senate Meets for 3rd Consecutive Week

Shelia Elwin

After meeting for three weeks in a row, Senate is finally on schedule again with twice a month meetings. Beginning as usual with a short devotional, this week by Senator Brown, the meeting took an unusual turn with a surprise recess suggested, also, by Senator Brown.

Apparently, Vice President Palgrove, in an effort to help the members get better acquainted, had planned a brief "cookie break." After reconvening, President Shim discussed the filling of Precinct 12. The Senate voted on accepting Cameron Cole as the new student representative.

Parliamentarian Duerksema and Senator Donohue spoke on changes in the Senate Constitution and the election manual. Also suggested was a plan to shop around for press prices for future Joker printing.

The budget-to-date was presented by Mr. Robert Merchan, Treasurer of Southern College, followed by Senator Parker’s presentation of telephone difficulties on campus and subsequent discussion of possible solutions.

 Mentioned, also, were the outside efforts of Senators Elwin, Heinsman, Jobe, and Parker on the washer/dryer situation in the Women’s Dorm.

Thatacher residents will be contacted shortly on their specific complaints.

Finally, V. P. Palgrove announced that, after much waiting, the Southern College name change committee has come to the final decision to retain the present name of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Senate adjourned with a reminder of the next regular meeting, Nov. 19.

Food Festival

Melanie Boyd

Sunday, Nov. 4, marked the day of the annual International Food Fair. It was held in the Spalding Elementary School gymnasium.

Cuisine from many different countries was on sale at the fair. The newest addition to the fair was the Ukrainian booth, and it proved to be quite popular. Countries, such as Korea, Mexico, Japan, Micronesia, India, and, of course, the good old USA, were represented as well.

While eating, guests were treated to many different forms of entertainment. A slide presentation was shown, and many of the students entertained with music. Bill Young, Obed Cruz, Tab Garmon, and James Wheeler were all part of the entertainment.

Those in charge felt that the attendance was the best ever and were hoping to reach their $2,000 profit goal. The money will be going toward defraying expenses of the student missionaries of next year. Not only did former student missionaries help out with the fair, but other students and members of the community contributed their time and food, also.

The fair received even further publicity than just on campus as the Chattanooga TV news station covered the fair. Although the cafeteria and the Campus Kitchen both suffered because of the competition, the students were delighted with the chance to sample foods they do not get to eat everyday. One student commented, "The Indian food was delicious. Many others probably agree, but so was the Ukrainian food, the Mexican food, the Korean food, the Japanese food, and all the other food!"
These churches are beautiful testaments to the importance of the Roman Church in history. But even more amazing than the size, beauty, or significance of these architectural wonders is the fact that after centuries of existence they continue to function as houses of worship.

Literature and music also had their places on the tour. In the British Museum alone it was possible to browse among original manuscripts of Pilgrims' Progress, The Divine Comedy, and The Prince by Machiavelli, not to mention such historic documents as the Magna Carta, a Bible printed by Gutenberg and numerous original scores by the world's greatest composers. At times some of these works literally came to life, such as with the performance of the Merchant of Venice at the Royal Shakespeare Theatre in Stratford-Upon-Avon.

Not all the activity was so "serious," however. While in Venice we were able to swim in the Adriatic at Lido Beach. In possible we saw the olympic pool where a more famous swimmer, Mark Spitz, took seven golds in the '72 games. And we were able to peer over the works of completed hundreds of years ago was almost unbelievable. Around every corner, in every room, in museum after museum, there appeared significant works by Michelangelo, Raphael, Rembrandt, Rubens, Bernini, and Durer.

Equally inspiring were artistic productions which could not be confined to museums. Until I visited the three largest churches in Europe—St. Peter's in Rome, St. Paul's in London, and Santa Maria Del Fiore in Florence—I really did not know the meaning of the word awesome. This term also applies to the numberless Gothic churches which we encountered on the tour: Chartres, Salisbury, York Minster, and Notre Dame to name but four.

Tour England in 1985

Once again students of Southern College will have a chance to study while traveling abroad during their summer vacation. The Best of Britain Tour will take place from July 9-30, 1985, visiting such notable places as London, York, Oxford, Cambridge, Canterbury and Stratford-upon-Avon. The tour will also take a brief excursion into northern Wales and will spend four days in Scotland.

Students may earn either three hours of credit for the basic tour or six hours if they take the five day extension to London through August 3. This credit may be in either history or humanities. It will satisfy the general education "world history" requirement, and may also help satisfy the upper division writing requirement.

Cost of the tour is $2100 ($2300 for the August 5 extension). This price includes all transportation, lodging, entrance fees at tourist sites, and two meals per day. There is also no extra charge for tuition for the college credit.

A $200 deposit will hold a place on the tour until March 1, 1985. Space is limited to the first 30 applicants.

For further information contact Dr. William Wolbers, Professor of History, at 238-2662 and 396-3220.
Clower Brings Down the House
Jack Wood

Students, faculty, and alumni gathered on Nov. 4, to hear stories from Jerry Clower, the world famous Grande Old Opry comic, belloved from the gymnasium speakers. Clower, a husband for 37 years and a father of 4 children, was described by an individual in the audience as being the "ticking on the cake" for the Homecoming Weekend.

The Southern Accent was privileged to have a private interview with Mr. Clower before his performance. The following is a part of that interview:

ACCENT: What does it take to be a successful comedian?
CLOWER: Folk's got to believe that you enjoy what it is you're doing. Actually I may not be a comedian. A comedian tells funny stories, but a humorist laughs an hour of laughter. I consider myself a humorist and not a story teller.

ACCENT: So you do write your own material?
CLOWER: Yes, I do, and the funniest things in the work actually happened. It's not something that some creative mind thinks up in a corner. I drew from personal experiences.

ACCENT: Are you doing what you wanted to do in life?
CLOWER: No, I prepared myself to be a 4-H Club Agent. When I was 9 years old I joined a 4-H club and the agent impressed me so to want to grew up like him. To do this I had to get a degree in agriculture which I got at the University of Mississippi, and the first job I had was as an assistant county agent working with 4-H club boys and girls.

ACCENT: How long were you in the agricultural business?
CLOWER: All of my life I have been in ag-business. I'm like the apostle Paul. Whatever state I'm in, I'm content.

ACCENT: How did you get your first album started?
CLOWER: I would attend farm meetings and say a few words about fertilizers, and I'd tell a few country stories to get their attention. A friend of mine suggested that I cut an album, and as a tongue-in-cheek venture, I cut one. Thirty days later the album went gold and sold 500,000 copies in a month.

ACCENT: Which album was this?
CLOWER: That was Yeezzy City Mississippi Talking.

ACCENT: With all the success of Richard Pryor, Eddie Murphy, and Robin Williams, do you find it hard to keep your stories clean?
CLOWER: I don't find it hard at all. I ain't even remotely tempted to do anything off-color. I was told by the record executives when I made my first album that unless I put some "dirty" stories on the album, I would never be known nationally, but I proved that to be an outright lie. I have 14 albums, one for each year, and no cussing has ever sold as many albums as I have. People are clamoring to hear a comedian they can bring their family or preacher to and not get embarrassed. I perform 200 shows a year all over the world.

ACCENT: Is the Jerry Clower that is seen on stage the same man at home?
CLOWER: I'm Jerry Clower 24 hours a day. I am against people who are very moody. I am against people who wave Bibles over their heads saying they're Christians, and you have to figure out whether they're in a mind where you can visit them. On and off stage I'm pretty much the same.

Clower's family must constantly be laughing then because that's the way he had Southern College going Saturday night.

The College Bowl Returns
Russell Duersen

It's time to recall all those little tidbits of information you learned because it is College Bowl time again.

You may ask "What is College Bowl?" It is an academic competition, in which four-man teams compete with each other in exciting matches, fielding questions from the humanities, sciences, and just plain trivia. There is something for everyone.

This year's competition is sponsored by the History Department, under the supervision of Dr. Ben McArthur. The format will have 12 teams of four members and one alternate playing in a double elimination tournament. Play will begin the first week of second semester, with the championship match being held during chapel on February 26. Teams are rapidly being formed now, so if you are interested in playing on or heading a team, leave your name and number as soon as possible, with Dr. McArthur in the History Department, and get to work studying those dusty old textbooks.

Southern College Has New Chef

Lori Selby

New behind the scenes in the Southern College's cafeteria this year is Chang Kwong Kim. Chang, who is Korean by nationality, is the school's new chef. After graduating from Korean Junior College, Chang taught elementary church school. He began to cook professionally when he came to the United States.

Chang's first cooking job was with a German company in San Francisco. While working for Denny's Restaurant in Sacramento, he passed the California Board for chefs. After moving to the East Coast, he worked as a chef, head cook-supervisor in various hotels in Atlanta, including the Fairmont Hotel, the Holiday Inn, the Hyatt Regency, and the Hilton Hotel.

Chang says his specialties are Chinese food and German food. He and his cooking have been featured in the Atlanta Journal.

Chang states that his biggest problem has been persuading his employers to let him have Sabbaths off. This temptation was related to the chance for promotion. Chang explains that there is a five level hierarchy, from Cook to Executive Chef. Advancement required working on the Sabbath.

Also a religion student here, Chang is preparing to become a minister to his people. He believes that sharing Jesus with those who don't know Him is the most important thing in life; as he puts it, "Seventy years is too short." His goal is to become a minister to the three quarters of a million Korean people here in the U.S., only about 8 thousand of whom are Seventh-day Adventist.

Chang's family consists of his wife, also a teacher and a cook, two daughters, and one son.
Wednesday night's game is not included. Davis will go against Jewett for the “B” League Championship. Next Thursday's game will be the A League champion, Rodgers, against the B League champion to be decided. The time of the game will be announced.
British Baroness Visits Southern Europe...

As the wheels of the L-1011 touched the runway at Hartford International, I thought about the realization of my dream. There was no question that I had gained a broader understanding of the history, the culture, and the people of Europe. At the same time, I had also acquired a better appreciation of my own country.

Let Us Give Thanks
Another Look at Thanksgiving

The Thanksgiving vacation starts early for most of us. By 5:00 p.m. of next Tuesday the majority of Southern College students will be on their way home or will have already reached their destinations. We will be enjoying home-cooked meals for a change, especially on Thanksgiving day. It’s that scene that generally comes to my mind when I think of Thanksgiving. This one holiday for me, in the past, has been a time to overeat, a time to be a glutton without worrying about the aftereffects. The scene is mostly true for a majority of the students on campus. And while there is nothing wrong with thinking about a table full of delicious delights, I believe that it is important to reflect also on the original meaning of Thanksgiving.

The first Thanksgivings were actually harvest celebrations. Farmers and their families would give thanks and prayers to God for the bountiful harvest of the season. For that reason, Thanksgiving is still held in the Fall. Usually a hearty meal was served during these celebrations, but the emphasis was always on giving thanks.

A couple weeks ago the gist of this column was on the importance of letting each other know that we appreciate each other. During the Thanksgiving season, we let God know that we appreciate Him. Although this act should be an everyday occurrence, this holiday allows those who forget also to thank Him. The Thanksgiving holiday then is a time for all of us to remember our Creator and His blessings.

Yet some individuals will look at their immediate surroundings and decide that they have nothing to thank God for. Not all of our experiences give us the current day’s equivalent of the “bountiful harvests” that our forefathers had. However, I believe that if one were to search deeply enough, he would find something to be appreciative for, even if there is only one hobby, one item, or one person that an individual enjoys, then that person or object is enough to thank God for.

In the next week, those small blessings, along with the larger ones, will be brought before the Creator and given thanks for by many people. We too should be part of that group.

Marijuana and Fatherhood

A developing fetus may suffer greater harm from marijuana use of its father than from that of its mother, says Dr. Susan L. Daltério, research assistant professor of pharmacology at the University of Texas Health Science Center, San Antonio, Texas. For the last ten years Dr. Daltério has been conducting research with laboratory mice on the effects of marijuana on the reproductive system.

In an interview published in the November 1984 issue of LISTEN magazine, Dr. Daltério discusses some of the effects of marijuana on the offspring of animals treated with cannabinoids. For example, male mice that had been treated had significant problems in making females pregnant. Of those pregnancies that did occur, many of the pups died either before birth or shortly after. Tests of the surviving male offspring showed them to have the same problems as their fathers. "When we looked at the chromosomes in the testes of both father and sons, we found abnormal chromosomes and birth defects in the third generation," said Dr. Daltério.

Since there are no clear generation offspring of human marijuana users available for testing, predicting what will happen to humans is still uncertain. Dr. Daltério says that effects similar to those observed in mice are very likely, though since some of the effects that were first noticed in humans, "I think we’ve started to get a reasonable amount of evidence to urge strongly that the father’s input be considered in terms of drug exposure.”

What is Essential is Invisible to the Eye

Madison Avenue gives us something for soft hair, for thick hair, for thin hair, for falling hair, for rising hair, for no hair! There is a hair tonic for children and babies and adults and senior citizens. Don't you get tired of all this nonsense? But we use it, because if we don't we're afraid the people around us are going to leave us on the dock for not using a certain kind of deodorant. And the boat will come back if we start using it.

In looking for our "keys," we might sacrifice self and search for ourselves in the light of someone else's opinion of who we should be. Sometimes this is called love.

One of the best definitions of love comes to us from Saint-Exupery, the French philosopher who says that, "Perhaps love is the process of leading you gently back to yourself." Not to whom I want you to be, but to who you are.

Dr. Buscaglia adds to that by saying, "If you want to know me, you've got to get into my head and if I want to know about you, I can't say, 'She is fat. She is thin. She is a Jew. She's a Catholic. For she is far more than that.'" The loving individual frees himself from "labels." He says, "No more."

But first we must love ourselves enough to accept all that is in us, for we are each unique. From the common ground which we share with everyone on this planet, grows a crop of unique individuals.

Perhaps the essence of education is to cultivate the soil of this earth to prepare us with the understanding, from loving hands, that help us to discover our uniquenesses, to teach us how to develop it, and then to show us how to give it away. LOVE IS LEARNED as is fear, prejudice, hate, concern, responsibility, commitment, respect, kindness, and gentleness.

"It is the weak who are cruel." Leo Rosten says. "Gentleness can only be expected from the strong."

What is essential is that we exercise our strengths and share with parents, teachers, siblings, and those around us the light of love.

The opportunity to make our surroundings a better place lies in our uniquenesses, but we must share today, for tomorrow may never come.

...relationships change people

Johns 4:8 says that, "He who does not love does not know God; For God is love.

God leads us back to the darkness of self where, in the light of the love we have learned, He shows us who we are.

"Facts don't change people." It takes a personal relationship with Christ for He is the "Key" to self. He is the love that leads us gently back to ourselves.

While men look on the outward appearance, God looks on the heart.

For you see, what is essential is invisible to the eye.

The Heritage Singers, a well-known Adventist gospel singing group, is searching for a soprano. A letter has been distributed to Adventist college newspapers in hopes that a singer might be located. Some qualifications are outlined in the open letter. "(The soprano) needs to be experienced and interested in traveling around the world," the letter reads. "She must also be dedicated to the ministry of music, as this is the purpose of the Heritage Singers." The letter continues by stating that the group is going to travel throughout the United States and has scheduled a trip to the Far East in January. Anyone interested in trying out for the Heritage Singers should send a resume, picture, and audition tape with 3-4 songs to Max Mace, Heritage Singers, P.O. Box 1358, Placeville, CA 95667. If you wish to contact the group by phone, you may call (916) 622-9369. Others may apply for future openings.

I thought you'd hit me, but you didn't.

And remember the time I forgot to tell you the dance was formal and you showed up in jeans?

I thought you'd drop me, but you didn't.

Yes, there were lots of things you didn't do.

But you put up with me, and you loved me, and you protected me.

There were lots of things I wanted to make up to you when you returned from Vietnam.

But you didn't.

Seven words that stand out in my mind are these: "Facts don't change people, relationships change people."
SC Names New Development Associate

J. T. Shim
Stewart Crock started his first day at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists on November 1 as Associate Vice-President for Development and Associate Director of the Endowment Campaign. The sign outside his office in Wright Hall says “Trust Services.” Says Mr. Crock, “What it all boils down to is fund-raising. He says that he was selected for the job because the school was looking for someone who had experience in trust services and who also had attended this institution.

After graduating from College-leade Academy, he spent four and a half years here and in 1964 returned for a four-year stint as voice and choiral instructor. He is a man of many talents and many places. He has filled the role of dean, music instructor, choiral director, principal, pastor, and youth leader at places such as Madison College; Georgia-Cumberland College; Mt. Pisgah Academy; Shenandoah Valley Academy; Rome, Georgia; and Bordeaux, France.

During the past four years, he has been first a trust officer and then the Director of Trust Services for the Kentucky-Tennessee Conference based in Nashville. His wife continues to serve as accountant at Madison Academy until a replacement is able to take over. They have three daughters of which two are married. Jodi, the youngest, recently graduated from here and is now completing a degree in Allied Health with emphasis on physical therapy at Volunteer State Community College near Nashville.

His job will involve a great deal of travel which he describes as the “long-term development of prospects and friends for the college. This will involve visiting with persons who express an interest in being a benefactor to the college and informing them of ways to give by both revocable and irrevocable instruments.”

SC Symphony Orchestra Performs

A home performance by the Southern College Symphony Orchestra will be given on Saturday evening, November 17, at 7 p.m. in the Physical Education Center on the College’s campus.

Guest artist for this annual Fall Concert will be Kenneth Sarch, artist in residence at the Winchester Conservatory in Virginia. Dr. Sarch will be performing the Concerto No. 1 in D for Violin and Orchestra by Max Bruch.

Violinist Sarch has performed extensively throughout the United States and Canada, in addition to concerts under the sponsorship of the U.S. State Department in South America (three tours) and in Israel. A graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, he holds an Artist Diploma from the New England Conservatory and a Doctor of Musical Arts degree from Boston University.

Dr. Sarch is the recipient of two Ford Foundation fellowships for his performance at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is a former director of the string program at East Tennessee State University.

Though Tennessee Governor Lamar Alexander had been billed earlier as guest artist, due to an unforeseen scheduling conflict he was forced to cancel his appearance.

Orchestral works on the evening program will include Overture to Fidelio by Beethoven; Symphony in D minor by Franck; and the Eroica Concerto in E minor by Vivardi, performed by music major Kevin Cornwall.

Three overseas tours have gained for the Southern College Symphony Orchestra International recognition. In 1979 the orchestra toured the Orient; in 1981 the South Pacific; and in 1983, Russia and Romania.

Orlo Gilbert, professor of music at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, has been conductor of the group for 17 years. Sixty-six students, faculty, and members of the community form this year’s orchestra.

General admission will be $1 at the door.

A Thanksgiving Story

Summit House: A Refuge for the Needy

Gurti Canton

As one travels away from Collegedale and onto Lee Highway, he may notice on his left on top of a small hill, a white brick house. Summit House is its name. The house is sort of across from where Misty's used to be. Approaching its entrance, one sees a steep gravel drive going up to a couple of old run-down buildings and another building that is mostly torn apart in the front yard.

The house used to be a Bible school, but then in 1973 Mr. and Mrs. Solomon bought the place and turned it into a motel. Mr. Solomon died in 1975 and left Mrs. Solomon with the mortgage. Mr. Solomon used to claim that it was seventeen or so acres. Mrs. Solomon thinks it's more like seven. There are two mammoth ponds down near the road, several lawns, one small garden, and some woods in the back. The two habitable buildings have a total of eighteen bedrooms to house people.

The place wasn't really making money as a motel, so since 1978 Mr. Solomon had been a nurse for thirty-eight years, she started taking in people who needed help and had no other place to go. She isn't making any money these days but she enjoys her work and is accomplishing much more.

There are five types of people living at the Summit House: mental patients, mentally retarded patients, alcoholics, drug abusers, and the aged. They range in age from twenty-five to ninety-seven years old. They are all homeless and incapable of looking after themselves.

They are not, however, invalids. The Summit House is not a hospital; the patients aren't lying in beds, waiting to die. If the patients can't walk, they can't stay there. But most of them need medical care and social workers. Mrs. Solomon keeps one of several nearby clinics.

Right now Mrs. Solomon is caring for thirty people. Some are left from people from Chattanooga; some others are from Moccasin Bend. Wherever they are from, the Summit House is the last resort for all of them. That is what they have in common with each other. Yet Mrs. Solomon says they are just one big happy family. She lauds as she says, "We fight like cats and dogs. I scream at them sometimes, and they scream back...but we love each other, and we have a great time."

Those who are able, do chores, such as washing the dishes, making the beds, helping with the laundry, mopping the floors, etc. (Mrs. Solomon says that they're not very good at that); one man even works in a little garden up behind the house. They look out for each other too--if someone falls, she has some other simple kind of problem, the others will help as much as they can. Mrs. Solomon says they stick together and gang up on her if they really want their way. But she was the second oldest in a family of thirteen and is very used to being the boss of a large family.

Mrs. Solomon gets no help from the government. The people she takes care of pay $14.00 a month which they get from their Social Security income. The Summit Church helps with clothing and food, and individuals from all over the area donate furniture and other second-hand items. She has six helpers on a payroll, who cook, drive, maintain the buildings and grounds, and help care for the patients.

The two mortgages total over $40,000, but Mrs. Solomon doesn't mind. She isn't worried about the loans--she pays all the bills and employees on time. She has a hard life, but she wouldn't quit her work for anything.

AU Offers South Pacific Tour

The Andrews University biology department will sponsor a South Pacific biological tour from August 26 to December 11, 1985. Only 16 people can go and the group must be formed and final reservations made by March 1985. Dennis Woodland, professor of botany at Andrews and one of the tour directors, recommends that application be made before December 1984.

Up to 12 college credits may be earned during the 13 weeks of travel and study in Hawaii, Australia, New Zealand, and Tahiti. During these summer weeks in Australia the group plans to visit the Great Barrier Reef, tropical rain forests, central deserts including Ayre's Rock, Peril in southwest Australia, Adelaidas, Melbourne, Canberga and the Sydney and Brisbane areas. Both north and south islands of New Zealand, where unique botany and birds are found, will be included in the tour.

By utilizing modest facilities and camping out in modern camping gear, the costs will be held as low as possible. Besides air travel from the west coast of North America, 8-10,000 miles of surface travel is planned by rental vehicles. Total fees including transportation, lodging, side trips and tuition will be about $4,300. The cost of food will be on an individual basis and should be quite nominal (about $400)." Woodland said.

Woodland and Dr. Allan Thomson of the biology department at Andrews will lead the tour. Courses offered will be ornithology for five credits, biogeography, five credits, and two credits are available for special projects. Tuition charges are flat rate of $1,100 (included in the $4,300). For application contact the biology department.

Sports Commentary

Jerry Russell

This week marked the opening of the volleyball season. More importantly it marked the beginning of the B-league volleyball season.

I know, all you A-league jocks and jockettes are probably saying; "Hey, what's going on here. Isn't A-league the superior league?" Well, in an informal poll which had one person as its sample size, it was found that the only people who thought of A-league as the better league was A-leaguers themselves. Let's face it. Why should we as fans feed the ego's of these few people who call themselves the select? By the time a volleyball match was over, most of them wouldn't be able to get their heads out the gym door. Another reason: who wants to see bump-set-spikes, bump-set-spikes for an hour and a half? So come on sports fans, come over and watch B-league where the action is more like everyday high-missed spike. Let the A-league play with themselves.

P.S. After Thanksgiving watch for Hefty's Bag when we'll take a look at the Top 10 women in volleyball.

The 1984 Intramural Volleyball season began on Monday night with a full schedule of games in both "A" and "B" leagues. According to intramural director Steve Jaekes, a total of 163 men and women have signed up for the event competition.

Under the present format teams will play a best-of-three-games match, earning a point for a win and an additional point for winning the match. Teams in "A" League will play six matches while teams in "B" league will play a five match schedule, with the champions being determined by total points at the end of the season. Also, don't forget to sign up for the three-man (coed) volleyball tournament to be held on Sunday, December 2 beginning at 8:00 a.m. All sign-ups are in the gymnasium. The tournaments consist of a double-elimination format, and will conclude later in the afternoon. The deadline for all entries is Wednesday, November 28. For further information, contact Steve Jaekes at 238-2855, 396-3672 or 238-2850.

Senior Challenge: Become a Responsible Alumnus

Reinhold E. Smith

As a Senior it is your responsibility to start thinking about becoming an Alumnus, a responsible alumnus, one who cares enough to sacrifice for the Christian education of our successors.

After one paragraph you're saying, "Is this guy crazy?" If you're like me, you will probably graduate owing someone money. GSL, NDSL, the bank, parents and/or the school. So why would you want to contribute to your already growing debt? The reason lies in the fact that a Christian education is a single-most important sacrifice we can make.

Teachers aren't exempt. How many of you teachers and staff belong to the "Committee of 100"? Every teacher, staff person, administrator, and alumnus should belong! Committee of 100 is a "group of concerned individuals and alumni who donate at least five hundred dollars a year."

As Adventists, we don't smoke, drink, or waste our money on too much night-life, so wouldn't that put us ahead financially? According to U.S. News and World Report, we have the wealthiest members per capita of any church. We as a church stress the importance of education, and thus we have more professional members making better salaries.

If you think I'm intimating that as a senior you should start thinking about giving five-hundred dollars a year, you're right! Let me show you how easy this can be: If you smoked 1½ packs of cigarettes per day (the national average) you would spend about $550.00 a year, and that doesn't even include drinking.

If it were not for the alumni, the real cost of our education would be about $15,000. Who could afford that? Who can afford $8,000? According to Sanford Ulmer, the individual who has the vision to suggest the ambitious undertaking of the endowment fund, fifty-percent of Southern College students come from homes that have annual incomes of less than $10,000 per year."

In 1980 Mr. and Mrs. Sanford Ulmer stopped to see his alma mater and decided to help students because as Mr. Ulmer put it, "There are plenty of buildings on the campus, and that's nice, but they don't pay. And students in them. But they will now if I can help it."

In four short years the Ulmers have seen the Endowment Fund grow to nearly six million dollars to "help defray tuition costs not to build buildings." According to Ulmer, Dr. Barrow stated: "If the tuition would drop $1,000 next year, approximately 200 more students would be able to attend who are not attending now." And with 200 students, the over-all budget would improve.

When asked the question, why don't Adventists support their schools like Catholics do? Bill Ills, Chairman of the Committee of 100, responded, "Adventists act poor, think poor, and spend poor. We don't perceive ourselves as rich, Christ is coming soon, and yet we, as a church, seem far too interested in possessions, instead of Christian education."

As a senior, I want to challenge my classmates to go to the development office and pledge $500.00 dollars toward the Endowment Fund.

If 300 seniors pledged $500.00, we would have $150,000, and did you know that BECA (Business Executives Challenge Alumni) will match it? It then becomes $300,000 or 100 scholarships of $1,000 for students next year—300 students who might otherwise have the opportunity to attend here.

Seniors, why don't we organize a committee entitled, "Seniors Endowment 100 and let this be our class gift, the best Southern College has ever received."

Gary Ford Speaks in Chattanooga

Gary Ford, younger brother of Zell Ford, a student here at Southern College, was guest speaker at the Chattanooga First Seventh-day Adventist Church on Sabbath, November 17, 1984. He is currently an evangelist for the Southern California Conference.

As an author of two Christian witnessing books, Gary recognizes the importance of personal Bible study. To aid such study he has started B.I.B.L.E. (Biblical Institute for Bible Lay Evangelism), an organization dedicated to personal Bible study.

After the Sabbath sermon, he will begin a seminar that will cover three areas: 1. Bible marking methods; 2. How to meet opposition; 3. How to appeal for decisions. The meetings are scheduled as follows: November 17, 3-5 p.m. Sat.; November 18, 7-9 p.m. Sun.; November 19, 7-9 p.m. Mon.; November 20, 7-9 p.m. Tues. All are welcome to attend.

Gymnastics Clinic A Success

Steve Martin & Jerry Russell Once again this year our campus was invaded by academy gymnasts from throughout the Southern Union, Virginia and Pennsylvania for the bi-annual gymnastics clinic and show. A total of 19 schools and 325 gymnasts participated in the 4-day workshop. Coach Ted Evans was especially pleased with this year's clinic because six new teams were present, and he said that he felt they added alot to this year's show.

The master clinician was Steve Elliot from Lincoln, Nebraska who is world renowned in acro-sports. He won the gold medal in this event in 1980 and was the first American ever to do so. The other clinicians were Keith Carter and Blue Holm.

Coach Evans speculated that there were nearly 2000 spectators on hand. He feels that interest in acro-sports is on the rise and is excited about next years Freshman talent. "On the average two out of three teams present were larger than ever before", he said, "and it seems the academy coaches are excited about these programs. We look forward to a strong gymnastics team next year."

Satellite Operation

Astronaut Joe Allen took hold of a satellite in history's first space salvage Monday. Allen held the satellite by himself for more than 90 minutes as Dale Gardner attached a locking frame on the can-shaped craft. Earlier Allen had flown out of the satellite as a rocket-powered backpack. He had attached a 4-foot pole-like device called a "stinger" into one end of the satellite. Astronaut Anna Fisher, using the robot arm of the space shuttle, snared a handle on the stinger and moved the satellite and Allen into the cargo bay.

Kidnap Victim Found

Law enforcement officers from two counties joined state troopers last Monday in a hunt for a man who is believed to have kidnapped a Georgia woman after killing her husband early Sunday. The woman, Victoria C. Holbert, 32, of Augusta, Georgia, fled from her abductor's car early Monday at an Interstate 1-12 truck stop west of Jackson, Tennessee. A state trooper spotted the car in Hardeman County several hours later and began a chase. The man wrecked his car and ran into some nearby woods.

Execution Postponed

Louisiana's governor granted a stay of execution to Robert Lee Willie on Monday, a day before he was to die, but said he thinks the convicted murderer will eventually go to the state's death chair. "I do not believe any good will come of this," Gov. Ed Edwards said of his order giving Willie's lawyers up to 15 days to ask the state's Pardon Board to change his sentence from death to life in prison. Willie was scheduled to die for the May 1980 rape-murder of 18-year-old Faith Hathaway.

Chapel on November 27 will be presented by Marlene Boxkind White, Ph.D., at 10:30 a.m. She will present a paper on the role which she calls the binge/purge cycle. Individuals who suffer from bulimia nervosa alternately gorge themselves with food and then purify themselves by fasting, vomiting, or self-induced diarrhea. She will begin by telling how it was uncovered at Cornell University where she is employed and will outline what she has learned about the people who practice it. She will also discuss the psychological, social, and cultural aspects which encourage it as well as its treatment. Dr. White has written many articles and published a book entitled "Bulimia: The Binge/Purge Cycle," which is available in our library.

Brock Hall Dedicated

U.S. Trade Rep Speaks

Brent Van Arsdell

On Thursday, November 29, Southern College honored businessman and patron Richard A. Brock by naming a new classroom and office building the "Richard Brock Hall." Jack McClarty, Vice President of Development at Southern College, said that Brock's participation in the Project 80 Campaign as a contributor and a fund raiser made the project a success and insured the construction of Brock Hall. Richard Brock stated that naming a building in his honor came as a surprise, but said he was glad to be able to help an institution where he and his father had both attended college.

The dedication address was presented by a nephew of Richard Brock, currently the United States Trade Representative, former U.S. Congressman and Senator, the Honorable Bill Brock. Bill Brock, a member of the cabinet, was appointed by President Reagan in January of 1981 and confirmed by the Senate. Bill Brock is the President's chief trade advisor and international trade negotiator.

Brock took the opportunity to do a little promotion of Southern College's endowed fund drive. "Until an adequate endowment is provided for this school, Southern College will remain in part," he said. "A 10 million dollar endowment program is a necessary thing and it must come from somewhere."

In a tribute speech to Richard Brock, Jack McClarty said, "Southern College has a legacy of people who set out to serve and only coincidentally ended up with a building named after them."

The campaign was presented by a nephew of Richard Brock, currently the United States Trade Representative, former U.S. Congressmen and Senator, the Honorable Bill Brock. Bill Brock, a member of the cabinet, was appointed by President Reagan in January of 1981 and confirmed by the Senate. Bill Brock is the President's chief trade advisor and international trade negotiator.

SM Brings Home Five Korean Orphans

Jack Wood

"A bringer of happiness" can be the words that best describe the job Mark Cox found himself engaged in on November 12. Last year Mark was the first to introduce this concept.

Preparing for the trip was no problem. But like most trips it is very difficult to have everything go as planned. Cox was delighted to have the opportunity to be involved in this work.

Upon arrival, he had given the wrong type of visa. Having needed to receive a worker's visa allowing him to stay in Korea for 6 months before renewal, he had given a visitor's visa. Cox was told he had to leave Korea immediately and return to Los Angeles to get the correct visa. After a couple of days, Cox was able to get a new visa and return to Korea for an additional 6 months before the visa had to be renewed.

Cox was able to complete the work in Korea as planned, and Mark found an opportunity to have the desired type of visa.

On the 12th they were driven by van to the airport where Customs and Security made sure everything was in order. Then Mark and Mrs. Choi were allowed to board the plane to go home.

The flight was all but relaxing for the two escorts.وش-ing and feeding seemed to be the main events. Upon being well into the flight Mark discovered the plane's air was occupied by forty-eight women from Long Beach, California, who had spent just time in Korea and to his relief loved babies. Women made the trip a little easier.

Landing in L.A., and departing with one of the infants was a relief as well as a reward for him, but the pressure was still there. He was only half way home now and Mrs. Choi was also leaving. Mrs. Anthony, a co-editor on page 2.

Southern College Professor Lectures in China, Hawaii

Dr. Ray Heffelin, currently on sabbatical, has been invited to the People's Republic of China from December 3 to 16 to confer with scientists interested in the same field of molecular research. On December 21, he will report at the International Conference of Pacific Basin Chemical Societies in Honolulu. Two Southern College students, Ken Priddy and Erin Sutton, are co-authors of the Hawaii report.

Lectures have been scheduled at Fu-Dan University in Shanghai, at the University of Science and Technology in Hefei, and at the University of Science and Technology in Beijing. The largest portion of the time in the PRC has been scheduled for intensive conferences with two scientists at Hefei. The two men have been studying the same area as have Dr. Heffelin and his Southern College students for about the same length of time. Contact was established in March of 1984. This opportunity to collaborate has been provided by the Southern College Alumni Association by means of a grant made to Dr. Heffelin recently.

The research area consists of the construction of periodic systems of molecules. It is known among scientists as "pure" research, meaning that it has no immediate application other than contributing to our understanding of the basic plan of the universe. These periodic systems are based on experimental data which other scientists measure and on complex mathematical theory. They serve the same purpose as does the familiar chart of the elements: they provide a visual and mathematical way of fin.
A Little Good News

As I sit at my desk writing this editorial a newspaper lays within arms’ reach, proclaiming bad news as a headline and more of the same within its pages. The top story is the gas leak in India which has killed more than 1,000 people and injured 20,000 others. The article below that one has to do with a hijacking and the holding of hostages in Iran. The one below the Iranian story deals with a drug case. There are other articles on this newspaper’s front page, painting a grim scene about the world around us. The editors, though, were considerate and put two color pictures, each dealing with a Christmas story, on the same page.

Annie Murray, the country music singer, had a hit last year called A Little Good News. The song is about wishes to hear some good news for a change rather than the usual bad, good news such as “... and everybody loved everybody everybody in the good old U. S. A.” Her wishes are idealistic— but I believe that more good news than bad news is possible in the world.

This year as editor of the Southern Accent, I have attempted to spread a little good news. I made it my duty to look for the positive aspects of this school that we were not aware of. I searched for general information not related to this school that was light in nature. If the bad news was important enough for everyone to know, however, then I printed it. But there hasn’t been much of it anyway. Last year my campaign motto was “For a Paper You Can Be Proud Of...” That the first editorial for the Accent was also about being proud, but being proud for many aspects of the school. Most of the news about Southern College that we have brought to you has been about something you can be proud of, and that is good news.

In this our last issue of 1984, we bring you more articles about Southern College and its students. If this issue should help you remember something about this school year, let it be that the first half of 1984-85 had more positive aspects about it than negative. The good sometimes just takes a little longer to find. And this fact can be a commentary about the world in general. It isn’t as grim all the time as the papers make it out to be. The outlook on the world just depends on one’s view of it.

Letters...

PARENTS APPRECIATE SUPPORT

Dear Faculty and Students of Southern College,

We are still searching for the words to express our profound thanks to you all for every expression of sympathy. Your cards and letters bring us so much comfort, and please know that every one will be saved and read again and again. For you that made the long trip here for Scott’s funeral, we are so grateful.

Each of us that knew Scott feels a “special” memory for a “special” person that we had to say goodbye to in October.

The many letters and cards have added another emotion to keep with us throughout our lives. The constant theme that “Scott mattered” in your lives will constantly keep his memory alive in our lives.

We feel honored to have so many of you reflect so positively on your association with Scott. It is a living memorial to his way of life and message he carried each day. As many of you said, “Scott lived life to the fullest”, always with a smile, but as importantly, he shared that philosophy with everyone he could. He had the strength of character to influence others and we can use those experiences to be better people in our day-to-day living.

We want you all to know how much Scott loved Southern College. We realize how many wonderful friends he had there, and we thank you for your friendship. He spoke often this year that though he missed home, he was still happy there and having a good year.

Scott was a wonderful son and brother. He brought us so much joy and happiness and we are so proud of him. It has been said that:

Some people come into our lives and quickly go. Some stay for awhile and leave footprints on our hearts. And we are never, ever the same.

We look forward with blessed hope to that great Resurrection morning when once again our family can be complete.

Most Sincerely,
The VanVleck Family

BUT KEVIN, DO YOU REAL I’VE BEEN TO THE BANQUET SINCE I CAME HERE?

JIM, LOOK, IF YOU BEEN TO ONE, YOU SEEN ‘EM ALL. THE PEOPLE SING THE SAME SONGS AND TELL THE SAME JOKES. IT’S NOTHING GET UPSET ABOUT. BESIDES THERE ALWAYS NEXT YEAR.
Reflections

Christians Are Just Forgiven

Melvin Campbell

I have little or no use for messages on bumper or tee shirts so when I thought of giving messages to the world other than my religious faith or politics in a bit more subtle manner. Now you may, I do not fault one's belief system, but I, in general, do not care for the being written on tee shirts or bumper stickers for me to read. Yet once in a while there comes along a thought glued to a bumper sticker that has a lot of value. For me that once in a while has been once in my lifetime—which by the way encompasses the entire history of bumper stickers.

The message was simple, written in blue, glued to the left-hand side of the rear bumper—"Christians are not perfect; they are just forgiven." I thought of that short phrase must have been a theologian, although I am sure that the originator would immediately give both a written and oral disclaimer to such a title.

Allow me to digress for a moment. Being a theologian, or should I say admitting to being one, can be very hazardous to one's well being. In fact, theologians are an endangered species at the present time in conservative religious communities. By theologians I refer to those who have formal training in theology and think about God. Now the rest of us are called 'theologians' as well, but we just don't like to admit to such a title. Yet we all theologise the same thing, usually functionally but seldom formally.

I side track easily—let me get back to the message—"Christians are not perfect; they are just forgiven"—which I think is a very profound theological concept. Indeed this may be the very thing that sets off Christians from non-Christians—forgiveness. We all know, at least I have a pretty good idea, that Christians are not perfect. Unfortunately all Christians are not forgiven either, which I suppose, makes them Christians in name only. Indeed if you are in Christ you are a new creature and to me that involves being forgiven.

I think that we are afraid of forgiveness! I really do. There is always the notion that if forgiveness is too easy then one will go on and sin again and again only to be forgiven again and again. Will repeated sins be forgiven again and again? I will allow the Scriptures to speak for themselves on that point. The Scriptures certainly do not condone a sinful life, but they do give the assurance that sins will be forgiven and that is that! To think that forgiveness comes cheaply is not to understand the forgiveness of God and the entire plan of salvation including the death of Jesus. To obtain forgiveness is such a simple thing to do or rather to attain from God. Yet we at times portray God as saying 'if you forgive you but... 'I think that Jesus dealing with Mary is a model of forgiveness for us. Christ told Mary that her sins were forgiven—it was an unconditional statement. He also told her to go and sin no more, but that exhortation for the future had nothing to do with the forgiveness of her past sins. Nor may it have erased the social, physical, and emotional consequences of her sins.

I never mind, she was stilled before God. And that was good news for Mary.

I mentioned before that we are afraid of being forgiven. I am not quite sure as to the reason. But it may be tied up with the idea that once forgiven we have taken place we are free. This freedom then means that we can go about sinning willfully and always expect to be forgiven again. The idea of a church full of carnal Christians frightened those of us who ran churches. So the 'you are forgiven but... ' doctrine continues in our thinking. Yet it is this very mental freedom of having sins forgiven without any reservations on the part of God of deeds on our part that sets the Christian apart in this world and the world to come.

A few months ago I was driving the car to Chattanooga, contemplating forgiveness when the concept seemed to come home in full force that I was forgiven, and since this was the case I was free. In fact I shouted it out loud right there in the car on the other side of Missionary Ridge. Here is what I said: 'I'M FREE, I'M FREE!' I said it twice with the exclamation mark. No matter what other people thought or surmised or speculated or vowed or gossiped, I was free and forgiven. Or rather I was forgiven and then free.

No, I have not gone out and purposely left a trail of sins to be enjoyed and then forgiven. But I have been thinking a lot more about the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus and what it means in terms of forgiveness. I really can't quite figure out exactly how it all works, but I am accepting it and enjoying freedom.

By the way, I will quote any of those "Christians are not perfect; they are just forgiven" bumper stickers, I would like two of them. One for the bumper of the car and the other for the inside of the dash. It is one thought that merits thinking.

(Melvin Campbell is a Professor of Education at Southern College, and he is a forgiven sinner.)

Bulimarexia

Bulimarexia was the subject of a one-day workshop held this week at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Dr. Markene Boskind White, of Freeville, New York, spoke Tuesday (November 27) to both students and guests for the presentations sponsored by the Student Health Service in cooperation with Student Services. Dr. White earned her Ph.D. in counseling at Cornell University in 1977. As a practicing psychotherapist, Dr. White has been involved in research and treatment of eating disorders for more than seven years. She has published a number of articles on this subject as well as co-authoring a book, Bulimarexia: The Binge/Purge Cycle. Dr. White discussed the trend of this increasing problem.

"The fact that 95 percent of individuals with eating disorders are female has much to do with the relevant cultural and psychosocial pressures that are put on young women today," she said. "Women are expected to be skinner and to be able to fit into the style of clothing worn today. Only a small percentage of women can look like the models without being anorexic.

Many women have discovered purging to be an easy way to control their weight, without realizing the adverse effects it plays on the whole body, according to Dr. White. She outlined three levels of bulimarexia. Most women personally affected see this initially as just another weight control measure. They only purge on the occasions where they have overeaten to the feeling of discomfort.

The next stage is more severe. Food becomes their central focus in life. They become irresponsible. Gorging themselves and then purging becomes an everyday thing when they realize they can get away with it.

New York City Has Everything!

A Student's Experience in the Big Apple

La Randa Curtis

Art? Me take Art? I don't know anything about Art! You say we get to go to Washington D.C. and New York City? Where do I sign up for this class?

Until Thanksgiving vacation, 1984, I had been exposed to very little art. I do remember being dragged through a Van Gogh museum in Amsterdam once, but I had no idea who he was. No I don't want to spend all this time proving to you that it was really ignorant on my subject; I think you get the point. What I do want to get across to you is that I am not quite as ignorant now because I took an Art class and found that art can be interesting.

I now wish that I could go back to Amsterdam and check out that Van Gogh museum again.

On the night of November 18, our art class loaded on the bus. We all said goodbye to family and friends, and asked them to remember us during Thanksgiving dinner. Everyone on the bus was excited and the noise level was quite high for the first while we were gone, the overhead lights gradually faded and everyone slept or rested uncomfortably. I managed to sleep pretty well, and it seemed like no time had passed when we were in Washington, D.C.

We all looked pretty charming after being on the bus all night, so we showered at Tidal Basin Park Academy and headed off to our first museum tour. We were only going to be in Washington, D.C., for six hours, so there was no wasting time! Since we were scheduled for two museums, the Hirshhorn and the National Gallery of Art, during that short stay, we really got a good taste of what would be experienced each day on the trip. The other days, however, were not so packed with travels and museums. We had plenty of time to see anything we wanted to see in New York City.

As we visited each museum, I began to recognize some of the names that our teacher, Mr. Garren, had told us about. It started to get exciting, because I felt like I was learning something. Now Mr. Garren, he is quite the professional New York City art critic. The group has been going to New York for fourteen years, and he has only missed two of those years. Whenever I wasn't sure what to do, I would stick with him, because he was always taking groups out to do something interesting.

One of the things that I found most fascinating in New York City was the variety of people. If one would stand in Grand Central Station, he would see just about everyone of person through in a matter of minutes. A lot of the New Yorkers were very friendly and helpful to us when they saw us with subway map spread out (typical tourist) and a look of confusion on our faces. In fact, once they got to talking to us, it was not easy to break off the conversation.

There were some sights that were not so pleasant, and these were the looks on the faces of the poor people, especially the street people. Seeing people living in those conditions made me very thankful for the life that I have. It made my major problems seem like nothing.

Well, we did see a lot between museums, but the museums were just as interesting as the rest. If I had to choose my favorite museum, I would have to say it was the Hirshhorn. It was not the typical art gallery. The building is not crowded into the city like all the others. It was more like touring through a gentle little museum. I really liked the Metropolitan Museum of Art, too. It had an enormous selection of Near Eastern Art, including the temple of Dendur from Egypt. Then there was the Frick Collection. This collection was displayed in an actual house or I should say mansion. I think we all tried to imagine what it would be like to live in this house, but the dreaming couldn’t last long, since we needed to take notes on the displayed art. It really is difficult to say that just one place was my favorite.

Our evenings were not spent sitting around the YMCA, our home for the week. Everyone found things to do that interested their individual tastes. Some went to basketball or hockey games, some to ballets, some to Broadway plays, and some enjoyed a brisk walk around Times Square or the ride to the top of the World Trade Center. There was enough to keep us very tired when we sank into our beds.

One of the most memorable things I did in New York City was going to the Macy’s Thanksgiving Day Parade. It was cold out there, but I’m glad that I did it once because I doubt I will ever get a chance to do it again.

Thanks to the hard work and experience of Mr. Garren, we were all informed of the best places to go in our free time. It was impossible for one person to see everything, but we managed to see quite a bit. We even had pizza in Little Italy, and shopped the streets of Chinatown. New York has everything!

Sabbath morning we were in St. Bartholomew’s Church, it was a beautiful old church the second home was for art students to worship in. The stained glass windows and the basic architecture were an inspiration to us as our Sabbath School teacher, Dr. Ken Springett, pointed out that splendor.

We had a special guest who lives in New York City tell us about the city ministry that Seven-day Adventists are doing in the city. Overall it was a wonderful way to spend our last morning in the Big Apple.

By Saturday night, we were ready to head back to Quick College. Our spirits were beginning to grow during the week we reflected on all the things we had done and stood in a week’s time (not to mention our exhaustion). It was a workplace for me because I received school credit; I got to visit a place I’d never been before! I learned about art, art history, different cultures; I learned about different people; and I know much more about ART!

Diana Green Honored by HSI

Lori Selby

How does learning to read under a bed sound? Rather fun? How about hiding under that bed during Arab-Israeli shelling? Both were part of Diana Green’s, presently a nursing student at Southern College, entry into formal education. Actually, "official" isn’t really an accurate description. From first grade through high school Diana has studied in Ethiopia, Lebanon, Cyprus, the U.S., Austria, Kenya. The majority of her schoolwork and her graduation in May of 1983 have been through Home Study International, headquartered in Takoma Park, Maryland. Between wars in Jordan and Lebanon, and evacuations in Ethiopia and Cyprus, Diana developed part of her unique outlook. "Sure, I was scared for my life. But it turned out to be a blessing. I realized my utter helplessness. When you recognize that being scared does no good, you depend on the Lord in a very real way."

Diana completed 8th grade and part of 9th grade in Atlanta, then headed out for Kenya with her family. There she tackled Algebra, Literature, Geometry, History, and typing all by herself. Imagine what the postal system may have thought about the frogs and grasshoppers she had to disect for Biology!

Diana studied at a German-speaking school in Austria for 11th grade, then finished 12th by home study. Throughout she made straight A’s except for one B in English Literature.

Diana has been chosen as Home Study International’s Graduate of the Year. She has also been recommended for recognition as Graduate of the Year by the national Home Study Council, an association of 75 accredited member schools in the United States. For this she will receive an expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C. to attend a Congressional reception at the Capitol.

When asked how she felt about receiving the award, Diana said at first she felt shocked and underestimating, then excited. Also at the Capital reception will be Diana’s parents, her senator, and congressman.

Professor, ... digging which small molecules are similar to which others, and they provide coordinates needed for the prediction of numerical values of properties. The Chemical Conference report will present hundreds of predicted properties of two atom molecules, for example, how far apart the bonded atoms of these predictions have been confirmed.

Many Southern College students have participated in the research that precedes this. Their research has been published worldwide. Scientists in Canada and several European countries have also made contributions. ATTENTION SCHOLARS! Don’t throw away those term papers you worked to hide in between the writing conferences. This Recherche paper writing contest awards of $75, $50, and $25 will go to the three best entries. Look for more information on the contest next semester.

FM90.5 Completes Classic Celebration

Non-commercial, fine arts radio station FM90.5 WSMC has successfully completed its Classic Celebration. The "celebration" is the public radio station's annual on-air fund drive to generate financial support from its listeners for the coming year.

The Celebration concluded at 7 p.m., Tuesday, (November 30, 1984), exceeding the $30,000 financial goal. The final tally of listener support was $35,177. This will allow FM90.5 to continue broadcasting the public radio programs tri-state area listeners have come to expect.

General manager Olson Perry says, "We plan to enlarge our classical library with new subscriptions to the Deutsche Grammaphon and Phillips record companies. This will help reduce the nicknamed, warped records in our library."

FM90.5 WSMC is funded by four sources: Southern College; its licensee, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting; program underwriters; and listener support. "It's really exciting--a special thrill--to place a great deal of trust in our listeners and volunteers and see them come through beyond what we asked," Perry says.

Additional support from the station's listeners is accepted at any time during the year. Increased listener support would help FM90.5 improve upon the public radio outlet for the greater Chattanooga community.

FM90.5 is the oldest non-commercial radio station in Chattanooga--on the air since 1961. In the next few weeks, the station plans to move into new studios.

Ex-cons likely to be cons again

The Justice Department stated Sunday that of the prisoners released from prison more than a quarter of them return to prison within 3 years and nearly a third are back within 3 years. They received these figures after a study of 14 selected states. Information from nine of these states showed the biggest majority returned during the second half of the first year of release. The Bureau of Justice Statistics stated it is "Suggesting the need for maximum post release correctional support" during that period.

Gambler involved with drug ring and prostitution

William Condon Graham, a gambler who was shot to death 2 months ago by his ex-wife, was involved in more than gambling. The 67-year-old professional gambler was also involved in organized prostitution and is suspected in having ties to a drug ring called "The Company." At the time of his death, Graham was under a Memphis federal indictment on charges of extortion and arson in an alleged conspiracy to destroy competing vending machine businesses in West Tennessee. His criminal record spanned about 20 years.

Deficit on Top

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and two Republican Senate leaders agreed Sunday that reducing the deficit, including cuts in defense spending, must take precedence over tax-system overhaul when Congress grapples with federal finances next year. Appearing on This Week With David Brinkley on ABC-TV, Regan said "Deficit reduction is by far the most serious problem facing the administration," and the Congress Senator Leader Robert Dole stated on NBC-TV's Meet the Press, "We don't want to throw out a tax bill on the floor until we've had some action."

Gas Leak

Poisonous gas spewed from an underground storage tank in central India early Monday morning. The result of the gas was approximately 500 deaths by the afternoon with the death toll expected to rise. 2000 Indians were hospitalized. The gas is said to have come from a union carbide pesticide plant.

Teacher's Strike

Teachers missed class in Chicago Monday and more than 430,000 students had the day off. The teachers are on strike for the 7th time in 15 years. The Union and the board are to have negotiated late Monday afternoon.

For those of you who were expected to follow the sport's commentary, Hisy's Big, there has been a slight change in plans due to the holiday season. This week we look at the Top 10 Women in volleyball.

But before that, I want to answer one question that I have been asked all week which is, "Why are you doing your commentary on this subject?"

There are two very simple reasons why. First, I feel that women do not get enough recognition in sports at Southern California. Secondly, to shout down the expanded egos of the "wanna be" sports jocks.

Sad to say, most men feel that a woman's only place in sports is the bleacher, cheering them on to a glorious victory...In other words, "waving of one's head." This is junk. I feel that there are many fine women athletes here and are every bit as important to our sports programs as the men.

O.K., now that I've got that off my chest, here's my top ten women in volleyball.

1. Loretta Messer
2. Robin McClure
3. Darla Jarrett
4. Melissa Boyd
5. Raquel Revis
6. Patty Wycoff
7. Audrey Gibson
8. Karen Schwenzer
9. Fabuline James
10. Nancy Holness

In ranking these top ten women, I discovered something very interesting. The top two, Messer and McClure, played on our public high school volleyball team. In view of women's status in sports, in some of our schools, is there a lesson to be learned here? The rest of the top ten women and many I have not mentioned, are fine athletes and this sports writer would encourage more participation in our sports program. Remember this girls, there is one sports reporter on your side. Let us forget this on Reverse Weekend, January 18 and 19.

Volleyball Tournament

J. Randolph Thuessbe

Steve Carlsson's team, the top seed in the tournament, emerged victorious in SC's 3-man volleyball special on Sunday. Carlsson's squad of himself, Alex Lamortz, and Bob Folkenberg enjoyed success throughout the day as they went undefeated.

Carlsson began the day with a forfeit victory over Rocket's team, then defeated Bryan Davis trio of Davis, Wayne Goffin, and Dave Nortleson 15-6 and 15-4.

Carlson then went on to end Rod Hartle's team 15-14 and 15-11. Hartle then damped Tim Tullock's team 15-5, 13-15 and 15-3 to reach the finals and a rematch with Carlson.

Hartle, with teammates Fred Roshcer and Lori Roscher were disappointed, though, as Carlson earned the championship by toppling Hartle 15-6 and 15-7. Hartle was the number 2 seed in the tournament.

Sigi 1984-85 is Updated

November, 1984

Computerized information on thirteen career options has been added to the 1984-85 version of Sigi (pronounced "Siggy")-the System of Interactive Guidance and Information. Available on campus in the learning center, Sigi is a career decision-making and information system for students that becomes more valuable each year because of its annual updates.

This year Sigi has added several emerging occupations such as INFORMATION SCIENTIST, a future-oriented occupation applying computers to the knowledge explosion; NURSE MIDWIFE, a modern, specially trained field in nursing, established to help prospective mothers and their families have their babies by the latest, natural methods; NUCLEAR MEDICINE TECHNOLOGIST; ART THERAPIST; and MUSIC THERAPIST; part-time career interests of art and music students, and others.

This year you can also check out three medical specialties new to Sigi-RADIOLOGIST, ANESTHESIOLOGIST and PSYCHIATRIST. These occupations are in increasing demand and are among the highest paid medical specialties.

This year you can investigate the difficult route to becoming a FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICER or learn how to use your language and business skills as an INTERNATIONAL TRADE SPECIALIST-a rapidly growing area of activity of American business.

COMMERCIAL CREDIT MANAGER, HISTORIAN, and PRINTING CRAFTS WORKER round out the list to thirteen.

You can also find out what has happened to the high-detailed occupations of a year or so ago-COMPUTER PROGRAMMER, PETROLEUM ENGINEER, or the once ultra-desirable careers of LAWYER or PHYSICIAN. You can check for increases in salaries, or look towards the future supply and demand. Every occupation has been checked for salary and outlook changes since a year ago.

These important additions and those added last year-ROBOTICS TECHNICIAN, COMPUTER ENGINEER, MARKETING/SALES MANAGER, MEDICAL OFFICE ASSISTANT, PODIATRIST, COMPUTER REPAIR TECHNICIAN and others, can give you a range of up-to-date choices not available in any other computerized career guidance system.

It is worth noting that all the Sigi occupations have been chosen to give a wide representation of career fields of interest to college students, college-bound students, returning students, and to those who have already earned a degree. They cover over 300 possibilities-including six computer occupations, over 20 business or sales titles, 13 engineering fields; innumerable allied health specialties; scientific and technical fields; and many performing arts, design, and journalism options.

In addition, the Sigi system teaches a career decision-making method that you can return to over and over again. You can also use the value clarification and decision-making method to explore your own-occupations of special interest to you.

Sigi gives you the opportunity to compare three occupations at a time, so that the differences in income possibilities, outlook, security, educational need, and more can be readily compared side by side. In fact, you can ask 28 questions for any occupation and receive detailed, up-to-date answers to every question. You can check the courses and program of study you need to take and then decide what seems to be the best choice for you. An advisor is available to discuss your plans with you.

If you have never used Sigi, you should try it. If you have tried it before, come try it again. You are changing and growing. So is Sigi!

Senate Meets for Last Time

Shelly Elwin

The last senate meeting of the semester was held Monday night at 8:00.

Senator Yaphing’s devotional was followed by the S.A. Treasurer, who informed the Senate that most of the departments are remaining on or under budget and things look good on the whole.

After a break for the yearbook picture, taken by Pete Prins, President Shim presented a report from the AIA president. The latter wishes to know S.C.’s general opinion about intercollegiate sports. Because of the high expense and traveling involved, Shim will obtain more information from AIA before the constituents are polled.

Next, a review of the S.A. Constitution brought about changes in the pre-requisites for the position of senator. Suggested is that a student may not run for senate unless he has obtained at least three hours of on-campus credit from Southern College or five hours of credit from another college. This will be brought to the student body for vote at the next S.A. chapel.

Senator Gershon, representing the Orlando campus, graduates in December and will be leaving. The responsibility of filling a vacant seat belongs to the president, so Shim appointed Ed Santana to precipitate 19 for second semester.

After a reminder about voting for Senator of the Year by Chairman Palisgrove, Senate adjourned at approximately 9:30.

As General Sabbath School Superintendent of the College Church, I want to express my appreciation to the students of Southern College for the blessing you have brought to the Sanctuary Sabbath School this semester. Your presence each week as well as the enthusiasm of your leaders has added an irreplaceable dimension to the Sabbath School program. We look forward to continuing this relationship with you when you return to school in January. Remember, the Sanctuary Sabbath School would not be the same without you. If you have any suggestions for improving this Sabbath School, please send them to either the church office or the chaplain's office in the Student Center. --Jesse Cowdric.
Richard Reiner Accepts Post at Florida Hospital

Brent Van Arsdell

Richard Reiner, formerly Vice President of Finance at Southern College, officially left the employment of SC on January 1st to become vice president of the hospital staff of Florida Hospital. He worked for SC for almost eight years before deciding to accept the opportunity to work in the health care field.

Reiner, 38, is a graduate of Union College in Lincoln, Nebraska. He worked for the state of Nebraska for several years before he came to what was then Southern Missionary College.

Reiner leaves Southern College with no hard feelings. Many of the administrators wished that he would stay. Kenneth Spears, who replaces Reiner said, "It was a very cordial parting. In my four and a half years as associate, I found him to be a super manager--dynamic and very businesswise. I hate to see him go. I wasn't looking forward to taking his job."

Ron Barrow, Vice President for Admissions and College Relations said, "For a young man whose prior experience was non-denominational, he quickly learned and adapted to the uniqueness of denominational finance."

Reiner, in a telephone interview commented, "This is a very exciting time of my life. I've worked in government, education and now health care. I look forward to the challenges and opportunities of working through problems and turning them into improvements."

As a vice president of Florida Hospital, Reiner will be in charge of risk management, patient relations, environmental services, systems management, material records, medical records, social service, hospital license, the parking garage, and safety and security.

Kenneth Spears becomes Vice President for Finance

Kenneth E. Spears has been named Senior Vice President for Finance at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists. Mr. Spears replaces Richard Reiner, who is joining the administrative team of Florida Hospital in Orlando as a general vice president, after eight years at Southern College.

A Texan by birth, Mr. Spears came to Southern College in 1963 as director of student finance. Over the past 21 years he has also held the posts of college manager, dean of student affairs, director of admissions and records, and, most recently, associate business manager.

"Ken brings to the office of vice president for finance an intimate knowledge of the college as well as a broad base of experience," stated Dr. John Wapner, in his announcement. The executive committees of the Board of Trustees made the appointment, effective January 1.

Following military service in the U.S. Navy from 1944 to 1946, Mr. Spears studied accounting at Western Business College in Houston, Texas, for a year. For the next 15 years he was employed in Houston by Mayes, Brothers Inc. He married Mildred Lauren Bates in 1947. She is a kindergarten teacher in the Chattanooga City Schools. Their three children, Susan Loer of Denver, Colo.; Steve of Sacramento, Calif.; and Karen Lippert of Orlando, Fla., were all born in Houston.

While on the staff at Southern College, Mr. Spears completed a B.S. degree at the college in 1966, and an M.B.A. degree from Middle Tennessee State University in 1973.

Mr. Spears has been a member of the Brainerd Kiwanis Club for 14 years. He is currently a city commissioner for the City of Collegedale. As a member of the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church, he chairs the church finance committee.

Albert Menard Anderson Lecture Series Commences

The fourteenth annual E. A. Anderson Lecture Series begins tonight, 8 p.m., at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists with a presentation by Albert L. Menard, executive vice president of Health Stream Corporation of Chattanooga.

The ten-part series will be held for the first time in the multi-discipline classroom building, Richard Brock Hall. The E. A. Anderson Business Seminar Room is located on the third floor.

Menard's topic is "Automation, Management, and Labor: Why Is There Such Conflict?" His lecture, free to the public, will be followed by a question and answer period. For a fee, college or continuing education.

Chattanooga Boys Choir Sings At Southern College Saturday

The Chattanooga Boys Choir will be heard in concert at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists on Saturday night, January 19, at 8 p.m.

The program, a part of the Artist-Adventure Series, will take place in the Physical Education Center.

The versatile group sings from a repertoire which includes timeless classics and Broadway show tunes. "Chattanooga Choo Choo" has become its trademark.

The Concert Choir is made up of about 30 boys under the direction of Everett O'Neal. By the time a boy becomes part of the Concert Choir, he has had at least three years of musical training, moving up from the Orientation Choir to the Training Choir and then to the Preliminary Choir.

Physical Installation of Organ Completed

Lori Saby

Opus 26, the long-awaited, handmade Brombaugh organ, is now standing in the sanctuary of the Collegedale church. Its physical installation is complete with most of the largest pipes in place.

John Brombaugh, the master craftsman who designed and built the Opus 26, arrived on campus January 10 to begin the voicing and tuning process. Business College Business College.

Though voicing each individual pipe is a process that will take approximately six months to complete, Mr. Brombaugh is working very hard to have one rank of pipes ready to play for the Sabbath services on January 19. Mr. Brombaugh will be introduced to the congregation at that time.

During the coming months, Mr. Brombaugh will also be voicing the Opus 27, a smaller organ built for Renaissance and Baroque music, which has been installed in the J. Mabel Wood Music Building recital hall.
The Death of a Good Year

As 1985 came upon me I was struck by the old line "Happy New Year" and other seemingly emotionless phrases. People seemed to have a grand old time writing "1984" on their checks or on the top of their letters. Ministers were happy to be able to preach on a subject which they had more than enough material to write on. They graced the bullets with titles like "How to Have a Great Year in 1985?" and "Making Resolutions You Can Keep." I watched how the people in Time Square could hardly contain themselves until the clock struck that magical time and they entered into a "New Year." Even the most sober sort of individual put on a smile for the stroke of midnight.

I pondered all the hoopla and wondered why people were so happy, even eager to see 1984 pass from the scene. As I write, I look at a caption of one of our affiliate papers that reads "A Last Look at 1984." Why is everyone so willing to let 365 days move behind them as history? Has it disappeared from sight?

I suppose that there are a number of reasons why the events of 1984 are now thought of by most people as history. In any person there is a sense of pride that needs to be bolstered. A whole year of fond memories can also bring with it thoughts of disaster: a death, a business failure, a divorce. An individual will sort out these memories that bring meaning to his mind and those that are to be looked at as events to be forgotten. Thus, a boyfriend may try to convince his girlfriend that a blot on his record was something that happened way back in 1984, while in the same breath he reminds her of the wonderful time they had three weeks ago (also in 1984).

But what satisfaction does it bring us to know we have entered into another year, one which will no doubt bring us similar experiences? It is all part of man's attempt to bury his past. He can once again lift his head with pride on January 1 because he has a clean sheet. But what are the great minds of the past would tell us that our problems, failures, and hardships are to be met and solved as they come. Thus, when January 1 comes around, it won't be just a time when unresolved problems can be put in the past, but the previous year will be looked back on as a learning experience—one you don't have to be ashamed of. I like 1984. When I hear someone say "Look to the future, forget 1984!" I think they've just killed a perfectly good year.

IS IT A REVERSE?
Dear Editor,
On the campus of Southern College, there's a weekend designated for the ladies to ask the men out for a date. The purpose of this weekend is not only to acquaint oneself with new people, but also to give the guys an opportunity to be asked out, instead of the guys asking out the girls. Also, an example can be set to the young men as to how the ladies desire to be treated. "Reverse Weekend" is an inappropriate name for this social event, because the male species are lax about asking the female sex out on dates.

Here are some examples of how a young lady treats a guy during Reverse Weekend with the expectancy to be treated in the same manner. "May I help you with your coat?" the lady inquired politely. "I'll take care of the check," said the young man demandingly, yet softly. "What would you be interested in doing after the game?" questioned the woman. A time for inversion is what makes a reverse weekend. Ladies treat the young men in the manner they desire to be treated.

Reverse is a change from the norm, but under normal circumstances, most of the Southern College men fail to treat the women in a ladylike manner. The guys seldom realize that a small act means a lot in a woman's book. Just the pushing under of a chair makes her feel womanly, and it also gives her a sense of worth. Even being polite when around friends makes a young lady feel special and not like one of the guys.

Because of a girl's inability to ask a girl out on a date, the girl then feels obligated to do so. If the young ladies usually ask the young man out, then where does the term "reverse" come in? Reverse Weekend is surely an improper name for Southern College's designated weekend.

Sincerely,
Dana Austin

Series...

Financial credit is available to those attending the series. At Healthstream Mr. Menard focuses on operational aspects, including finance, information, systems, accounting, and planning. Previously, he was with Wellington Industries in Madison, Georgia, as chief financial officer, was U.S. controller for MacMillan Bloedel Building Materials in Atlanta, and was chief financial officer with Southern Foundry in Chattanooga.

Prior to migrating to the South, Mr. Menard was chief financial officer with Bradford Trust Co., in New York. He worked in Citibank's Money Market Division and also Citibank's corporate planning department. Before that, he was business planning manager for ITT Data Services. He also served with IBM's Advanced Systems Development Division. He has taught high school chemistry, physics, and math. He and his wife, Marcella, have four children.

The 1965 E. A. Anderson Lecture Series, presented by the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College, is scheduled for three more Thursday evenings through April 18. Further information is available by contacting the series director, Dr. W. Rozell, at 615-238-2758.
New Collegedale Pastor Arrives
Melanie Boyd

The newest addition to the pastoral staff of the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church has arrived. Elder Ed Wright, his wife Marilyn, and their two sons Nolan and David have come to us from the Fresno Central Church in California. He has served for eight years as the Pastor of Youth and Family Ministries to the large 1,500-member Fresno congregation.

Pastor Wright is looking forward to the work that lies before him here in Collegedale. He will have many responsibilities at the Collegedale church, all of them concerning the family ministries aspect. Pastor Wright will be leading out in the Family Life Committee, working with young married couples, forming small Bible study groups, and doing some communication and public relations work.

Pastor Wright feels that his biggest challenge here in Collegedale is the “brand new environment” he will be working in. He wishes to be a facilitator, one who starts out small to assist in the needs and progress of people, the people of the Collegedale church and surrounding areas.

Kidnap Victim Rescued
Kidnap victim Amy McNiel was rescued from her abductors Sunday after being held for 45 hours. She was taken captive by gunmen Friday morning on her way to school. One hundred thousand dollars was demanded for her ransom. She was rescued by Texas Rangers’ John Dendy and Howard Alfred in a final shootout near Satellite, northeast of Dallas.

Train Derailment
An express train in Ethiopia derailed while crossing a curved bridge. One relief worker quoted rail officials as saying that the engineer apparently failed to reduce speed around the curve, causing the seven passenger cars to derail. Fourteen eight passengers were killed and 559 were injured. An official also stated that those injured are believed to be in serious condition.

Mining Company Guilty
The Grundy Mining Company pleaded guilty for violating the mine safety law which resulted in the December 1981 underground explosion killing 13 workers. John MacCoom, the assistant U.S. attorney, delivered a critical assessment of Grundy Mining’s failure to meet safety standards. MacCoom said that omission of required ventilation partitions contributed to the building up of methane gas that was ignited by a cigarette lighter.

Prison Complaint
Dr. Seymour Halleck, a professor of psychiatry, said that the prison in the Nashville Unit is the worst he has ever seen in terms of lack of availability of exercise of human contact. Halleck investigated the prison after a condemned prisoner sent a complaint to the federal judge about undercooked meals, leaking toilets, and the large amount of roaches. The professor’s testimony was followed by testimony from an inmate on Death Row. The inmate described his cell as being a place not big enough to do juggling jacks. “The prison food,” he said, “is so undercooked that blood can be seen on the bones of the meat.”

Long-Term Aid to Ethiopia

WASHINGTON-In addition to airlifting emergency relief supplies to starving displaced persons in drought-stricken Ethiopia, the Adventist Development and Relief Agency has started a long-term program to help Ethiopians reclaim their future by growing food supplies on irrigated land, according to Mario Ochoa, ADRA deputy director.

"ADRA has voted $350,000 to undertake plans for a three-year program," Ochoa said. "An ADRA agricultural expert is in Ethiopia surveying possibilities for a teaching program. The costs will be tremendous, but the potential is even greater if we help the Ethiopian people to be self-sufficient over the long term."

"As important as the current emergency relief efforts are, what will happen over the long term, after the plight of the millions of starving and malnourished Ethiopians drops from the evening news?"

Ochoa said ADRA is an "integral part of the international relief program that is rushing aid to Ethiopia's displaced persons. We've already airlifted nearly 60 tons of tents, blankets, medicines and clothing worth nearly $500,000. We're also shipping five large trucks and three trailers from Germany with 100 tons of high-protein biscuits and dry milk donated by people in the Netherlands."

"Currently we're feeding about 30,000 people, primarily small children and their mothers, at three locations," Ochoa said. "We're stretching our financial resources to the limit, but the people keep streaming in, often sick with pneumonia, tuberculosis, diarrhea and other diseases. The photographs in the news magazines are for real."

"Some estimates put at least six million people on the brink of starvation in 12 of Ethiopia's 14 provinces," Ochoa continued. "The impact of that number is hard to understand. It is the equivalent of the populations of New Hampshire, Montana, Nevada, North and South Dakota, Delaware, Vermont, Wyoming and Alaska. One figure puts the death rate from starvation at 1,500 per day."

"As mind-boggling as the current situation is, next year may be even worse. This year's rains have been inadequate to grow crops for next year in a large part of Ethiopia," Ochoa said.
And the Walls Came Tumbling Down...

Maude Jones Hall, first occupied in 1917, was razed last week. After the English Department departed to Brock Hall during the Christmas vacation, the building had ceased to have a function. In its place Southern College will likely put a parking lot for village students.

Take a Walk on the Biology Trail

Michael J. Battistone

"Jack and Jill went up the hill To fetch a pail of water..."

Or so the legend has it. But who are we kidding? As college students, we have a pretty good idea why both Jack and Jill ascended that mythical incline for one pail of water! Had they been students at Southern College, the destination of their quest would possibly have been the Biology Trail, which has the reputation of being one of the more romantic spots on campus.

Compressed by the ridges of White Oak Mountain, the Trail was constructed in 1979 by improving an old fire road. The Biology Department removed fences and fallen trees, placed steps over rough terrain, dug ditches to control erosion, and has since been responsible for trail maintenance. Much of the recent labor has been done by Julio Narvaez, who spent last semester clearing out summer brush, re-directing drainage ditches, repairing steps, and destroying yellow-jacket nests.

The diversity of plant life is typified by the Southern forests, and Jack and Jill may well go through Hill with an Acer eclectus in order to complete a lab assignment for Systematic Field Botany. In addition to students and teachers, regional wildlife are attracted to the flora surrounding the trail: forest inhabitants include squirrels, chipmunks, rabbits, raccoons, oppossums, foxes, and others, as well as many species of birds which nest here.

The path is easily accessible--the trailhead lies just across the road behind Hackett Hall--so if ever you find yourself in the mood for nature study, a romantic walk, or just some reflective solitude, then take a hike--on the Biology Trail.

History Department Plans Summer Seminar in Costa Rica and Mexico

Students who are looking for a unique way to earn credit in history should investigate the recently announced travel seminar to Costa Rica and Mexico, July 1-25, Dr. Floyd Greenleaf, professor of history, will conduct the excursion. Space is available for ten students.

Called "Central America and Mexico: Crucible of Change," the seminar focuses on revolutionary change in the United States' nearest neighbors to the South. The seminar will yield three hours of credit under either HIST 295 or HIST 495, the department's directed study courses which also include credit for travel.

Both sections apply to general education as a major or minor in history. Participants may opt for either lower or upper division credit, the principal difference being that upper division hours will also fulfill the general education writing requirement.

Seminar participants will divide their time almost equally between actual meetings and touring historic, geographic, and cultural sites in Mexico and Costa Rica. On the schedule are meetings at the United States embassies in Mexico City and San Jose, Costa Rica.

The seminar begins on July 1, when the group gathers in Dallas to fly to Monterrey, Mexico. Actual seminar meetings start the next day at the University of Montemorelos. After a day of sightseeing in Monterrey on July 8, the group will fly to Mexico City for six days of probing the historic and cultural richness of Mexico's capital and surroundings. Among the sites to be visited are the pre-columbian pyramids at Teotihuacan and the floating gardens in Xochimilco.

On July 15 the seminar flies to Costa Rica for more meetings at the Adventist Center for Higher Education--known as CADES--in Alajuela, near San Jose, the national capital. Besides one of the most pleasant climates in this hemisphere, Costa Rica also provides beautiful scenery which students will see during a half day trip to Irazu, an 11,000 foot volcano that erupted in the 1960s and dumped ash all over central Costa Rica.

Cost of the seminar is $1400. The price includes roundtrip air travel from Dallas to San Jose, sightseeing fees, hotels, food and lodging at the University of Montemorelos and CADES, medical insurance, and three hours of college credit. Participants will buy the two paperbacks required for the seminar and their own meals while on the road. They will also have time for independent activities.

According to the brochure explaining the seminar, Dr. Greenleaf, seminar director, has made over twenty trips into Latin America and the Caribbean since 1962 and has devoted his research time to Seventh-Day Adventists in these regions.

Interested students will find brochures and applications in the Student Center, the Library, and other places on campus. Dr. Greenleaf is ready with additional explanations.

Attention Writers!

The Southern Writers' Club will be sponsoring a Writers' Workshop on Thursday, January 24, starting at 1:30 in Wright Hall, Conference Room A.

Dr. Richard Jackson and Dr. Luke Wallin, both professors of English at the University of Tennessee, Chattanooga, will critique the works of students and other interested individuals. Thursday evening will include an informal supper meeting and a reading in the Student Center Lounge. Everyone is invited, but anyone interested in having a work critiqued must have it to the English Department no later than Monday, January 21. For more details, contact Mrs. Ann Clark in the English Department or George Turner.

The College Bowl Begins Play

The College Bowl began this past Monday, January 14, with four of the newest teams "butting heads" so as to advance to the next round. In the first match, Kathryn Park's team edged Mitzie Acosta's by a score of 150-140. The second match saw Shelly Duncan's team coming on strong at the end to beat Liz Cruz's group, 235-135.

The College Bowl is an academic competition, in which four-man teams compete with each other in matches, fielding questions from the humanities, sciences, and trivia.

This year's competition differs from last year's in a few aspects. Firstly, four more teams were added, bringing the total up from eight to twelve. Secondly, whereas in 1984, a team not answering the toss-up question still had an opportunity to answer the bonus question if its opponent had responded incorrectly, this year only the team answering the toss-up question gets a shot at the bonus. Finally, the matches earlier in the week were well attended; more people watched Monday's games than the amount who watched last year's final.

In Monday's first game Park's team answered a question with less than a minute left to go in regulation and with the score tied 140-140. She advanced to the next round and will play Stan Hobbs' group, last year's champions. The second match saw Duncan's team forge to an early 90-0, only to falter behind 120-10. Then in the last three minutes they answered 3 questions consecutively making the final score 235-135.

Basketball Begins

Steve Martin

Basketball season is in way with 26 teams playing this year, divided into "AA", "A", "B", and "women's" leagues. AA League is comprised of five teams: Mock, Green, Cain, McFadden, and Acedo. A League has 9 teams: Davis, Wiser, Deely, Malbon, Hobbie, Wile, Grove, O'Neal, and Shelby. B League shapes up with Sutton, Pheilin, Snider, Jones, and Sarbird. And the women's league: teams they are Klubsh, Washington, McClure, Beardsley, Hildebrand, and Green. Action got underway on Sunday night with Grove downing Wuri 51-45. Tunell led all scorers with 15 points, and Polkember contributed 13 for Wuri in a losing cause. In Although Montana is never found in the same breath with Joe Namath as Marino is, Montana is efficient and cold. Anyone who drives a Ferrari has got to be cool. Montana doesn't pile up the number yards and touchdowns like Marino does, but the numbers on that win column pile up, and touchdown numbers aren't all that make a football team. You have got to have some defense too. Just ask Dan Fouts. But then again, Dan Fouts didn't have the "Killer Bees" on his team. It has been said that inside linebackers Jay Brophy and Mark Brown must play well against the run to stop the 49ers offense. But sometimes those running backs, Wendell Tyler and Roger Craig can get into the passing lanes and go one-on-one with the linebackers and create some ball movement to compliment the running game. Defense will win this game. The 49ers have Fred Dean, Jack Reynolds, Kerri Turner and Dwaine Board as their hardhitters, all of whom will try to get to Marino before his receivers get open. If they over-pursue, Marino will have all evening long to find Mark Clayton and Marlon Duper, who have caught 30 TD passes between them. Dwight Hicks, Ronnie Lott, Carlton Wilkinson, and Errie Wright are the men in charge of stopping the Markers Brothers. Clayton has 20 TD receptions for the Dolphins, and Duper 10. Not to be forgotten are running back Tony Nathan and receivers Jimmy Cefalo and Nat Moore. The 49ers secondary will have to hit hard early to slow down Marino's targets.

Who'll win? I don't know, but some of these people do: Charles Schnell: "San Francisco 49ers 49 Miami 38. San Francisco will win because of the experience of Montana and they have a long game, whereas Miami only has the passing of Marino." Chris Lang: "Dolphins by 3 because Dan Marino is unstoppable, and the 'Killer Bee's' are back! Miami 35-32." Tommy Ellis: "I would like to see San Francisco win but I think it will take it by 3. Miami: 24-21." Brad Semka: "San Francisco will take it by 10, 27-17." Dan Chrismont: "Miami by 3. The Dolphins have a strong defense, whereas the 49ers are a long game, the game being decided by a field goal." The 49ers will win this game and the 49ers have the better of the two. But still, look for a high-scoring game with the game being decided by a field goal difference as the 49ers come out on top, 31-28." David Smith, English: "The 49ers by 3, 24-21. The 49ers have a strong defense and have an excellent scorer for a quarterback in Montana." Russell Daesken: "...the 49ers defense will contain Montana and Miami's short yardage plays will prevail in the end. Miami, San Francisco 7, 35-28." Coach Jacks and Coach Evans: "The majority of the games are friends and there is no reason why this should be an exception. Take the spread. (San Francisco by 3)." What do I think? Well, considering this game will be played in San Francisco's back yard...and considering Miami's placekicker is unreliable...and considering the last time the Dolphins played against a good secondary, (L.A. Raiders in Orange Bowl) they lost...and considering the two teams had two weeks to learn to stop the other's "unstoppable" offense, and considering I have picked the last seven Super Bowl winners (that I know)...the 49ers will take it 27-24." Look for announcements concerning a Super Bowl Party sponsored by Hiilari's Hospital. The party will be taped during the game, and what's the best way to catch the Super Bowl than with a bunch of friends—or enemies, depending on which team you're for? The party will be held in the cafe if all goes well.

The Super Bowl should be very exciting again this year. Probably the worst thing about this year's Super Bowl is that it's being broadcast by ABC. AHHHHH! Relax! Rewind. Play "Welcome to the Planter Dome..."
The Further Adventures of Mr. Ed or Celestial Cruise

Gart Curtis

This is about a trip. It’s a bit fictitious; it’s a bit realistic. It all happened a while ago—about six weeks after school started...

It was one of those days when one feels as though one would rather be ahead of oneself. To get this effect into my life, I decided to put all the work that had to be done at the moment in a pile at one end of my desk. It was one of those piles that takes up the whole desk, and drains into the top drawer. I toddled out to my car and I was headed for a ride through the countryside on a semi-OX day.

We took off from the parking lot at the speed of time. Over the tracks, sweeping right, a left—bend down and right. I saw an old familiar mill house. It seems to me that Grindstone Mt. was somewhere near by. Fall-colored leaves on a Palo Alto road to drive on, and they danced in the rearview mirror—scared away from a sleepy, decompositional death.

I hadn’t begun to get really ahead yet when I passed a hitch-hiker. He had a box drawn on his white T-shirt with a black marker; he had an old suitcase on his shoulders; he was walking backwards and holding his thumb out—like they do.

I stopped. I asked him where he was going. He said, “I’m just going. You know, goin’ on.” I said that well that’s a coincidence because that’s what I’m doing.

So off we went. We got into some territory which was new to me; I didn’t recognize anything.

I asked, “What’s your name?”

“Bettered Thandeared.”

“Nice name,” I replied.

“Yeah. . . thanks. I’m a destructuralist. I came here from Germany awhile back.” And he volunteered to tell me all kinds of stuff like he thought cars were a waste of money, and that, in fact, money was basically a waste of time—it was how the leaders of capitalist governments kept the masses pacified. He told me I was a slave of my car. (Mr. Ed didn’t like that; he missed a beat. But Bettered didn’t seem to notice.) He told me about how he would prefer to be alive in Germany under Russian rule rather than alive and running around Berlin for an afternoon with vitreous humor streaming down his cheeks (paranoid nuke talk).

I thought about that for a few minutes, and then said, “If I didn’t have a car, you wouldn’t have a ride.” He said that he was just taking advantage of my mystic of bondage and servitude, and besides, he was not in a hurry to get anywhere. He felt sorry for me. I didn’t have anything to say for a while.

Just about the time I was getting ready to feel uncomfortable we were waved down by a man with a broken Grenada. I stopped and told Bettered to get in the back. The new man got in the front seat with his brief case and pinstripes, and hands shook all around.

“My name is Mr. Byloe Selhigh. My friends call me Wheeler D. I was on my way when my car blew a hose. . . Probable time to get rid of it.” (Mr. Ed didn’t like that; he missed a beat. But Mr. didn’t seem to notice.) Mr. Selhigh patted the dash.

“What did you pay for this thing?”

“You want to buy it?” It was a question as much as it was a statement that I wasn’t going to tell him. He guessed what I meant and changed the subject to what might as well have been the price of salmon in Canada.

The road was winding along through all sorts of terrains and we passed every thing from four or five Muslim fanatics making their mark in an abus ed A-310 Airbus to a black man from South Africa wearing a frock and getting a fortune in prize money (for his humanitarian efforts) from a trust fund set up by the man who invented dynamite.

Mr. Selhigh immediately started asking vague questions about Nicaragua and whether or not the Sandinistas had any redwood. They talked and talked and from the back Bettered would throw in some sort of intellectual but incomprehensible statement about how worthless everything was. And Kil began to eye him suspiciously.

I cruised along and gave them my two-cents worth when I felt like it. Usually I didn’t feel like it. Bettered was stretched out across the back seat; I asked him, “Hey, Thandeared, are you comfortable?”

“I’m OK. That’s all.”

Up ahead on the left, but walking with his back to us, was a man dressed in a bright reddish purple orange jump suit. I slowed down to five mph and yelled out at him, “Hey man, do you want a ride?” He didn’t say anything, but jogged around to the passenger side and hopped along until Mr. Ed came to a complete stop.

I had to think fast. I didn’t want to put Kil in the back for fear of having a homicide right behind my very eyes. If I put Byloe in the back, he and Bettered would drive each other mad.

So even though I wanted to talk to this new guy, I told him to get in the back.

I said, “If you want a ride, get in the back.”

He kind of a strange way he told him. I said, “Who are you?”

He paused for a moment...

“Orange... Agent Orange...”

I thought to myself, “Oh wow.”

Half an hour later things were pretty quiet in the car. It turned out that Kil and Wheeler D had known Agent Orange before, and Bettered had heard about him. I had picked up a minor celebrity. Kil had gotten to know him fairly well in the middle sixties apparently the two had worked together in the jungles north of the Dan Nam Air Force Base in ‘Nam.”

He had some very hard feelings towards Agent Orange. But Kil was helpless to do anything except complain.

Mr. Selhigh, it seems, had actually sponsored Agent Orange during that very same action. "But Mr. Selhigh seemed to be ashamed of the acquaintance. He was looking out at the beautiful weather we were passing and muttering about how herbicides had just been like a commodity to him. "...I didn't know a lot about long range negative after-effects, and even if I had—didn't you know—but if I had known, and hadn't done what I did—I didn't do anything wrong—someone else would have taken the pie... the earth isn't spinning any slower now..."

Betterred was chucking through his nose but he had his arms folded tightly around his chest and he was pressed up as close to the window as he could get. He acted as if he had a real aversion to having any kind of contact with the Agent. There were traces of fear and loathing in his manner.

Agent Orange hadn't said one word since he introduced himself.

I swerved around a sharp corner and caught a glimpse of a DEAD END sign. It was sticking out of the road embankment at about a forty-five degree angle and ivy was creeping up it. I stopped Mr. Ed when there was room to pull off the road.

"Lock," I said, "do you guys know where you want to go...where you want to be?

They all thought for a moment and agreed that they wanted to go just a bit further along.

I said that well I had to be getting on back because this wasn't where I wanted to be.

"There's nothing up there, you know..."

So they all got out and walked. They said thanks, and headed up the road. Kil, Byloe, and Betterred crossed the road and walked on the left side, shooting nervous, sidelong glances at Agent Orange.

On my way back I noticed that the ivy seemed a bit further up the DEAD END post.

After twenty minutes of driving through all the things I had seen on the way, Grindstone Mountain loomed ahead. A big concrete drainage ditch appeared for a split second on my right and it had the words "skate tough or go home" spray-painted on the far wall. Five more minutes and I was pulling off Camp Road into the guy's dorm parking lot.

I passed my roommate and he yelled at me, "Hey, did you go to town without me again?"

"That's right!!" I laughed.

FM90.5 Changes Its Programming Format

You may have noticed the change one of the past two Saturdays. Turning the dial of your stereo to FM90.5 soon after lunch in the cafeteria, you became aware of the fact that "Sacred Favorites" and "The Happy Day Express" no longer were on the air. Although "Your Story Hour" has not been removed, the elimination of the former two programs is part of an overall programming change. WSMC now emphasizes a classical format seven days a week, effective as of January 1, 1985.

Prompted by the conviction that FM90.5 is a missionary arm of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church, the station felt its previous format left its listeners with the view that the station's programming is inconsistent. Glenn Perry, General Manager of the station, explained that often the listening audience in Chattanooga tuned out the gospel music programming on Sabbath; thus FM90.5 failed at times to be a witness to its listeners outside of Collegedale.

Perry elaborated further: "FM90.5 defines its listeners as being those with a specific interest in the arts." With a classical format integrated with selected brief inspirational messages throughout the week and during the Sabbath, the station expects to increase exposure to Christian principles in living.

Because gospel music's purpose is to "nurture the flock," it did not fulfill the missionary purpose of the station. Todd Parrish, Develop Director of the mission, emphasized that there are other stations in Chattanooga whose sole purpose is to nurture. Among these are WNSB, WDIY, and WFLI.

Parrish assures the Adventist community, however, that they will still be able to hear their favorite programs, "The Voice of Prophecy," "It Is Written," "Focus on Living" and other similar programs have remained on the air.

Listeners of FM90.5's NPR "Morning Edition" and "All Things Considered" will also find that these have not been removed from the new programming.

FM90.5 WSMC is the only classical music station licensed to Chattanooga. It is also the oldest non-commercial station in the area. With a listening audience of approximately 20,000 in any given week, Perry and Parrish believe that the station will be more effective in meeting non-Adventists on their ground, especially the thought-leaders of the Chattanooga community.

Although the station will not carry gospel music anymore, Perry still sees the students as listeners. He expressed surprise about how many students have come to him and said that they do listen to the station and will not change their habits because of the change.

Parrish would like to let the students know that FM90.5 is now playing more popular classical music, such as Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, during the afternoon. It also promises to those that may be concerned that classical music selected for the Sabbath hours will be chosen with special care.

Social Vice President Lovett Resigns

Mike Batistone

Marie Lovett, the Student Association Vice-President for Social Activities, resigned Monday evening, January 21. Although her decision was formally announced at a special senate meeting called for 8:00 p.m. on Monday, January 22, 1985, the letter of resignation, submitted to President J.T. Shim the previous day, was effective immediately.

Reasons for this resignation involve a number of conflicts with the Student Association, although not necessarily with all of the members of the SA. Marie felt that for her interests, as well as those of the student government officials and the student body, she would no longer be able to serve.

Bob Folkenberg, a junior theology major and Mituc Yaping, a business administration major, have been appointed by President Shim and approved by the Senate as co-Vice-Presidents for Social Activities and have been installled effective January 22 to fulfill the remainder of the term.

President Shim says that the change will not be detrimental to the administration and in keeping the SA calendar of events. However, because Bob and Mituc are entering their offices with only two weeks to work on the Sweetheart Banquet, this annual event may be delayed by one week. The new SA officers say that they will work extra hours in an attempt to have the banquet go out as scheduled.

Half-price Tuition Offered to SC Graduate

Melanie Boyd

Southern College is now offering a special half-price tuition plan for baccalaureate graduates who wish to further their education by pursuing another major, by entering into a pre-professional program, or by wishing to update their skills.

To be eligible for the half-price tuition plan, one must have earned a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university and have a clean transcript, with accounts and loan payments up-to-date with the college or university. Complete applications, transcripts, and recommendations must be turned in to the Admissions Office of Southern College no later than two weeks before the beginning of the semester for which you are applying for.

Financial aid is available for those who might need it. The plan applies to classes where space is available. The offer does not include independent study, directed study, student teaching, internships, private music lessons, or a program where a tuition discount is already in effect.

The half-price offer is for tuition only. It does not apply to lab fees, surcharges for applicable courses, dormitory charges, or cafeteria charges. The semester credit earned will not apply toward the KLM Gateway to Europe program.

Southern College reserves the right to discontinue this special offer with a decision from the college administration.
Come In From Out of the Cold

Randy White: Friend or Foe?

Editorial

Come In From Out of the Cold

School should have been canceled on Southern College this past Monday. This statement summarizes the general opinion of the students and many professors and administrators as well. When one considers the temperature stayed under the zero-degree mark for all of Monday morning, then he must wonder why the doors of this institution were not closed.

While inclimate weather will not always close schools in the North, the situation Chattanooga and its suburbs found themselves in this past week proves that the South is not prepared to handle a combination of snow, ice, and sub-freezing temperatures. This statement is not a knock on the South, simply a fact. Because this area of the United States does not normally get this kind of weather, its leaders do not see the need to spend enormous amounts of money to combat something that may happen once every five years—that is not to say that Chattanooga was caught totally off guard, however.

The situation on this campus also proves that we too were not prepared to do battle with Mother Nature. Upon exiting Talge Hall that morning for an eight o’clock class, I immediately stepped on a sheet of ice. Most of the sidewalks were in the same condition. I was able to avoid a fall, but other were less fortunate. Luckily, no one was injured. Through the course of the day, I was told that Herin Hall, the nursing building, could not be heated properly, that many of the roads leading to the campus had ice on them, and that certain professors stayed home because of these roads. In effect, Southern College was not safe for one’s health on Monday—at least not until the morning classes are held on future days that look like Monday. The school will then have time to put salt on the sidewalks, to test buildings for any heating problems, and to get things ready for the students.

The roads may, by that time, have thawed, and teachers may then be able to come to work. The Chattanooga area may not experience inclimate weather like the type it had earlier in the week for a long time, but if it should, then Southern College should be absolutely sure that the campus is safe to attend.

Christian education is affordable for anyone who wants it and is willing to make the sacrifice.

White would like to advise the students on a change in policy regarding advances against one’s labor.

“We’re giving close to $20,000 a month in cash with a balance, not including the 25 percent a student is allowed to draw. With the 25 percent, it is between $35,000-$40,000 a month, sometimes higher.”

The bulk of these expenses are not directly school expenses but instead related to new clothes, gas for the car, or Saturday night dates. Because of this fact, there is a six week to two month lapse between when the money is given out and when it is returned, amounting to about $80,000

Time to Think Summer Camp!

La Ronda Curtis

This last semester of school is already going by quickly. It will not be long until the summer break comes. Most of you look forward to summers, but you also may feel anxious about how you will spend the summer. A question that usually follows: Will you have to work hard all summer to make enough money to go back to school next fall? Looking for a good summer job is not very exciting. There is a solution.

One solution could be working at a summer camp. My summer camp experience has served two purposes for me. I was doing a job that I enjoyed and I was able to make a good amount of money.

But a legal aspect of camp is the spirituallife. Every camper possible will visit your camp sometime throughout the summer. This is good news for the conservative SDA kids to a girl who has never heard about Jesus. There are numerous opportunities to help spiritual lives and your own throughout the summer. It is really exciting to see the campers get involved with the singing and praying at camps.

There is an amazing opportunity to refine some of your human relationship skills and to meet new people.

In a heartfelt gesture, several dozen students and faculty of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists started off the new year by giving the gift of life. Fifty-six plats of blood were donated last week (January 15 and 16) to help save lives.

The Blood Assurance organization, which was formed in 1972, is the only source of blood to 12 hospitals in the local area, 10 of them in Hamilton County and two across the state line in Georgia. One hundred pints a day, six days a week, is the average needed to keep these hospitals in constant supply. Because of community volunteers, this non-profit organization can usually meet this requirement. January and the summer months are the most difficult times of the year to find volunteers, according to a Blood Assurance spokesperson.

The Blood Assurance staff have been coming to the campus of Southern College for seven years, though the bloodmobile was acquired until 1979. This is the first year that the college is benefiting from a new program, whereby, if 25 percent of the students donate at least a pint of blood, the entire student body is covered by the Blood Assurance protection plan. The protection also includes the group member's immediate family. This protection can be used anywhere in the United States and extends over a two-year period with an infinite amount of blood being available for their use.

"The students and administration at Southern College have a positive attitude towards giving blood," stated the Blood Assurance representative. "The good response from faculty and staff spills over to the students. They are now working toward their 350 pint minimum which provides coverage for the 1985-1986 school year."

A total of 243 plats of blood have been given during the September, November, and January two-day visits. A fourth visit is scheduled for April 2 and 3. A donor must weigh at least 110 pounds and be 17 years or older. Careful screening ensures that certain health requisites are met in order to safeguard blood quality.

Bonnie Lee, a senior nursing student, has given over a gallon of blood. Other frequent donors at Southern College are Dr. Bill Richards, professor of business administration, and John Becket, director of computer services.

The donors not only benefit from the satisfaction of helping those who need blood each day, and from the reassurance of covering potential personal need, but they also receive a free T-shirt and are cared for very well by the Blood Assurance staff. Donors are given soft drinks and cookies.

Blood Assurance staff say they like to visit high schools and colleges because "the gift that keeps on giving" instills in youth the realization that the process is easy and relatively painless. They hope the donors will continue showing their community awareness by donating blood through adulthood.

Break a Leg

Lori Heimsohn

On our way to the mall tuesday, my little sister, Lisa, was running away in her usual after-school manner. She was excited that I promised to stop at Taco Bell—a promise I made, with my usual extreme enthusiasm, after every game, trying to decide exactly what she was going to make me buy for her. I heard only bits and pieces of our talk, since I was listening to the radio. But I was careful to nod and say "Uh-huh" whenever she paused for air.

Two songs later, I noticed that the subject had changed to a list of all the films she has seen in school from first to seventh grade. As I listened between songs, I noticed one fact that amused me for a second, then put me into such deep thought that I didn't notice the radio anymore—90 percent of the films were on the same theme: Man struggles, almost falls, finds God to help pick up the pieces.

Joni Erscon dove into shallow water at age seventeen, became paralyzed, and found Christ.

Another girl was hit by a cement truck while riding her horse. She was paralyzed and became a Christian.

Cathy was jogging when a car hit her, breaking her legs. Jesus helped her through her struggle to run again.

My mind raced to the films I've seen on a similar theme, like the film I saw this summer at vespa...a champion surfer turned to drugs before turning to God. Book stores are full of stories about actresses and actors who tried drugs, alcohol, and other pleasures before they realized that God is their only source of fulfillment. He is the only One who can fill their empty spaces and make their lives meaningful.

Such fantastic themes are witnesses to Christ from the mass media. Remember The Prodigal, the Billy Graham movie released last summer? That family became Christians also. I find it very unfortunate that these people had to go through so much hardship before they slowed down enough to listen to what God was trying to tell them for a long time. Most of these people knew who Christ is, but none of them took the time to know Him personally. So Christ just watched and waited until they were ready.

Our parents spanked us when we were bad. They were preparing us, caring only about the end result—that we be good.

God also is concerned about the end result—eternity. And he will do everything, even if it means sending misfortune our way. We are forgetting Christians. We already know who Christ is. Let's get to know Him personally now. Don't make Him break you leg.

James Boren is Next Anderson Lecturer

"When in Doubt, Mumble" is the title of James Boren's presentation to be given at 8 p.m. tonight in the E.A. Anderson Lecture Series. The ten-part series is being held in the E.A. Anderson Business Seminar Room, located on the third floor of Brockett Hall on the College of the Collegetale campus.

Dr. Boren will also speak earlier in the day, at the 11:05 a.m. student convocation in the Physical Education Center. The public is welcome.

Known as a humorous speaker with a message, Dr. Boren went to Washington, D.C., to head the staff of a U.S. Senator. He later served for nine years as a senior foreign service officer in Latin America where he received numerous awards for his work.

In 1968 Dr. Boren founded the International Association of Professional Bureaucrats. As president of INATAPROBU, he presents "Order of the Bird" sculptures to those who apply the principles of dynamic inaction or orbital dialoguing.

"Red tape is the tape that binds the world together," says Dr. Boren. "We bureaucrats are not against cutting tape, as long as it is cut lengthwise."

In 1972, Dr. Boren ran a 170-mile race from Philadelphia to Washington, comparing the speed of the Pony Express and the U.S. Mail. With a saddlebag of mail on a horse, he beat the U.S. Mail, some of it by as much as eight days.

The E.A. Anderson Lecture Series, presented by the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College, was initiated in 1971 through the generosity of Eugene Anderson, a Christian businessman from Atlanta and founder of Southern Saw Service, Inc.

The Night of the Donkey

On February 2 at 8:00 p.m., the Student Association will be sponsoring its annual benefit. Come and watch as some of your favorite teachers or ministers are made fools of by donkeys. Donkey Basketball Night will cost all students three dollars in advance, three-fifty at the door.
money would not have helped speed the process of adding them to the campus.

When the idea of a ScanVertiser—Lois Linda's La Sierra campus has a similar one—was suggested, it didn't receive a warm welcome. The feeling was that our campus already had enough information systems, such as the Arc- cent, Chatter, and 2552. Eventually, the idea was approved on the assumption that the ScanVertiser could serve as a reinforcement for announcements already made and a reminder for those who find places, times, and dates easy to forget when keeping up with a busy school schedule. Also, it would cut down on the number of posters around the campus.

The ScanVertiser, with a five minute read out time, was purchased for $2,600. It will eventually be hung above the cash registers in the cafeteria. This seems to be the ideal spot since most of the student body spends some portion of the day there.

Bill Dubois, SA's Public Relations Director, will be in charge of the messages. Announcements similar to those on 2552 will be shown first. The remaining time can be bought for a dollar per message of ten words or less. Public messages, such as sporting events and meetings, and personal messages, such as birthday wishes, should be given to Bill or turned in at the SA office. For Valentine's Day, read-out time will be devoted to special sweetheart messages. It is hoped that the ScanVertiser will broaden communication, increase turnout to campus events, benefit students, and add to the enjoyment of campus life.

Marijuana: More Dangerous Than Tobacco

"Smoking one marijuana joint is probably equal to smoking a pack of cigarettes a day," says Dr. Alfred Munzer, a lung specialist from Takoma Park, Maryland. He goes on to state that thus far few lung disease deaths have been attributed to marijuana smoking "only because marijuana as it is being used today hasn't been around that long."

Dr. Munzer, who is a member of the Board of Directors of the American Lung Association, is deeply concerned about the carcinogenic properties of marijuana smoke. In an interview to be printed in the February 1985 issue of LISTEN magazine, Dr. Munzer explains why smoking marijuana can be far more dangerous to the lungs than smoking tobacco.

"Literally hundreds of compounds are released when a marijuana joint is lit," says Munzer. "We don't know exactly what each of these compounds does, but a great many of them are irritants to the respiratory tract. If the respiratory tract is irritated long enough, precancerous conditions appear that can lead to true cancer." The greater potency of marijuana in recent years has further increased the risks involved with its use. Not only does marijuana smoke contain 50 to 60 percent more cancer-causing agents than tobacco smoke, but marijuana users tend to smoke joints down to the very end to inhale much more deeply than tobacco smokers, which draws the carcinogens further into the lungs. Munzer cites tests which show the presence of precancerous cells in the sputum of marijuana users after only three to six months of regular marijuana smoking.

“Hey Jer.”

“What?”

“I’ve got this great idea for your sports commentary this week.”

“O.K., Heft, I don’t want to hear it. Last time I asked for your help, I could have been kicked out of school if I had written one of that stuff.”

“No, listen. This really good stuff. Are you ready?”

“Fish fighting.”

“Oh Heft, c’mon. I have a deadline. I can’t be wasting my time listening to this nonsense.”

“Just hear me out. You’re gonna love it.”

Against my better judgment I listened to what he had to say, and I must admit, I’m sold on the idea.

Snyder 57 Pheirim 37

This game was close for the first 5 1/2 minutes, but Snyder went on a tear to put the game out of reach just shortly after halftime. Ron Snyder led all scorers with 32 points, while Ernie Phereims chipped in for 13 in the loss.

Wurl 86 Wise 69

Bob Folksenberg scored 17 points and controlled the boards while Scott Henderson scored 19 points to lead Wurl over Wise, 86 to 69. Wurl’s team had a very balanced scoring attack as five players scored in double figures. Roy Collin had a great game, scoring 26 in a losing cause.

McCure 55 Beardsley 29

McCure New past Beardsley 25 to 29. Merrer led the way, scoring 23 points, and McCure added 14 more. Peters scored 18 in a losing cause, as she was the only offense for Beardsley.

THURSDAY

Pheirim 49 Sutton 37

Ernie Phereims team bounces back from a blowout earlier in the week to beat the Taratards by 12. Other again Phereims led his team in scoring with 14 points while Mark Henderson followed with 13, right in the second half. Duralde led all scorers with 13 in a losing cause.

Snyder 58 Jones 33

Row Snyder (18 points) led his team to a crushing defeat of Jones, who had only 11 points at the half. Wayne Griffin had 13 points in helping Snyder to the victory who led throughout the entire game. Jay Doderick was the only bright spot for Jones with 14 points.

This is how fish fighting works. Each participating student would buy a Chinese fighting fish called a beta for about 3/6 dollars. Two fish would then square off in a neutral fighting bowl. The first fish to back off is the loser. These fish fights, of course, would be the preliminaries, after which the fish would be ranked and put into a double-elimination tournament according to their ranking.

The fights would take place in the dorm until popularity increases after which they could be moved to the Student Center and eventually maybe we could get Jacks to make out a schedule. These fights would take the place of soccer, which is no big deal (maybe three or four people would get upset) because nobody likes soccer anyway.

Before long everyone will have a fish. By that time we will have tag-team fish fighting and fly weight, bantam weight, middle weight, and heavy weight divisions.

I urge everyone to join because this is the intramural in which you don’t have to be an athlete. Even if you’re fat, buy a fish. The determination shown by that little guy in the water could be all the motivation you need to drop a few pounds.

Buy a fish and contact Steve Martin (he’s in charge) to enter your fish in the preliminaries, which will begin as soon as we get a second fish.

Next week, open “Hefty’s Bag” and find Rodney Dangerfield’s referee. An insightful look at what is happening between the players and referees.

TUESDAY

Hobbs 66 Wise 65

In a thriller, Stan Hobbs’ team barely defeated San Wise’s team in A League action Tuesday night. Hobbs delivered a clutch free throw with seven-second left to put for the winning margin. One thing wasn’t overlooked, and that is having 26 points to play with, Dean Schleifer was fouled by Dave Alonso, and in the heat of the moment, an instant caused the clock to stop without a foul notice. Mike McClell and Ron Aguiris each scored 26 points for the victor. With the loss, Wise dropped to 1-1.

Snow

Snow. It's H2O in one of its finest forms. It's pretty basic stuff, actually. And it is one of the all American clichés. You know, "of gentle wrist, and downy flake." Let's face it, those downy flakes are fascinating—snow is beautiful. Everyone appreciates it. Even the unluckiest people get creative in snow. They walk through it, and they think about it. Profound thoughts like, "Hmmm...snow...snow...noo-noo-deep," or maybe, "Here it is, covering all of everything." (Pause for moment) "And then," (another pause) "It is so hot in the summertime. think of that." The ability to think in the abstract is a skill that many Americans like to believe they possess. Unfortunately, many Americans suffer from delusions.

Americans, on the whole, are very imaginative when it comes to snow. We make snowballs and throw them at each other, and laugh. (Too bad we can't fill M3 warheads with slash and play a game there on the reds.) We make snowmen and watch them melt. (Remember folk, school elections are coming up; we will get to hear and see all kinds of verbal snowball fighting.) We go skiing, sleigh riding, tobogganing—and nobody knows what all. (Maybe the Encyclopedia Brittanica knows.) Some native Americans even build their homes with snow.

But by the way, an American did not invent snow. Snow happens...in the right places...at the right time. There is, tiny particles of water, not large enough to be called drops, which are existing in temperatures as low as -40°F get near a little piece of something to cling to. These tiny bits of water evaporate when they come close to a dust particle and instantly freeze around the particle without ever going through the liquid stage. This is called sublimation. The evaporated condensation always crystallizes in a hexagonal structure. That's weird.

These beautiful hexagonal crystalline structures, composed of molecules consisting of two hydrogen atoms and one oxygen atom, can form floating down out of the clouds. Now we all know that the unbalanced force on snow (as it is on everything near or on the Earth's 9.8 Newton's (thirty-two feet per second squared.) But with all the friction, or upward force, supplied by the atmosphere, it can take a long time for those downy flakes to land. After all, they do have a very large area to mass ratio.

And what a beautiful ratio.

Even that master of dualism, Rene Descartes, took time out from his brilliant (and sometimes misleading) philosophical projections to be one of the first in history to draw and write about snowflakes. (That's a fact.) Go ahead, read him sometime. And while you are trying to understand what he means about the difference between mind and body (more specifically, the difference between mind and brain), while you are trying to picture the line behind the line in your mind's eye, while you are trying to float your mind out through your ears, you might just pull yourself together and go out and thank the Lord with all of your being for something as beautiful and fun as snow.

Thought Provoking Whys

Reinhold E. Smith

Does this school or the people who attend it sometimes puzzle you? Do you find yourself with questions that don't quite seem to get answered? The following is some of the more popular questions that "Dear Lori" won't answer.

Why do people who have been driving for 50 years become rude, pull out in front of you even though there is five miles of empty road behind you, turn without using their signals, and start driving 15 miles per hour in a 35 mile zone? Seriously, after 50 years wouldn't you finally get it right?

Why do half the people in Hamilton County drive five miles per hour in snow, while the other half in a ice-covered parking lot, on a hill, and floor the gas pedal? You native Southern drivers are the best weapon the military could ever use. The best way to get a "Yankee" to go home is to drive 75 mph on ice and honk on go five miles per hour till they go crazy and turn around and go back where they belong.

Why were the steps on this campus designed for muscle-kicking? Whether it's up or down, you feel like you're going to need charm less immediately.

Why didn't the school get a two-for-one special and have Lynn Wood Hall ripped down, too?

Sub-Freezing Temperatures Hit Collegedale

Allen Starbird

The worst weather seen in years came to Tennessee this past week, freezing trees, pipes, and ponds, and sending people frantically searching for anti-freeze for their cars. The minute a temperature degree broke all records for the State of Tennessee since 1966.

Early Sunday morning a heavy snow cloud spread over the eastern state, leaving in its wake 4 inches of snow.

Sunday afternoon all but two schools in the Chattanooga area had decided to close because of bad weather conditions. The only schools that had classes were Southern College and Lee College in Cleveland.

One radio broadcaster for KZ-106 commented, "Those Adventists"

Despite the opening of school here at S.C., a few classes were cancelled because teachers were not able to get to the campus. Many village students also were kept home due to slippery roads and extreme cold.

The inclimate weather seems also to have affected some of the students' sanity because during the coldest period of the week Mike Scoula and friends tried jogging in the snow, wearing only shorts and tennis shoes. They gave up after only one lap around Talge Hall.

PERSONAL
Dear ladies of Thatcher Hall, Many thanks for not asking me out this past Reverse Weekend. If I had been asked, I would have felt bad when I had to decline because a date would probably mean that I would not have gotten my 13 hours of sleep and would have been exhausted during the upcoming week.

S. A. Elections Season Begins

Russell S. Duerksen

As most of you are probably aware, it is the season for SA elections once again. And with an election comes a schedule of events. Listed below are the scheduled events for this year's campaign.

1. Friday, February 1, 1985, 8:00 am. A full listing of all candidates meeting filing regulations will be posted.

2. Monday, February 4, 1985, at 8:00 am. Campaigning may legally begin. This is when you begin to see posters sprouting up all over campus and you can see strange people walking up to you and asking for your vote.

3. Thursday, February 7, 1985. Chapel on this day will be a speech given by a chapel at which all candidates will have to make their speeches describing their proposed plans for the next year.

4. Thursday, February 12, 1985. If necessary, a preliminary election will be held on this day for any office fielding more than two candidates.

5. Tuesday, February 19, 1985. This is the day in which you get to question the candidates for SA office. A general press conference will be held by all candidates in the cafeteria at 12:00 noon. At which they will be available to answer questions.

6. Thursday, February 21, 1985, ELECTION DAY. Please get out and vote on this day. Your vote does make a difference. Last year the presidency was decided by only 10 votes. A polling place will be open somewhere on campus from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. on that day, so there is really no excuse for not voting.

In conclusion, these are the SA officers for your SA that you are electing, so get involved in the electoral process. Remember, it's the future of your tuition that they'll be spending, so consider carefully, and vote accordingly.

Choo-Choo Hosts Valentine's Banquet

Alan Starbird

As February 14 inches closer, many students are wondering how this year's Valentine's banquet will turn out.

According to Missie Yap- ching, co-Vice-President for Social Activities, the banquet will be held, as planned, on February 14 at 7:00 p.m. The place will be the Choo-Choo's Imperial Room. This year's Valentine meal will be prepared by the Choo-Choo's staff and will be served buffet style.

The banquet is considered an open affair, meaning that a person from either side of the campus may ask his or her "sweetheart" for the special evening.

Your Voice" is Subject of Next Anderson Lecture

"What You Have Always Wanted to Know About Your Voice, But Didn't Know Enough to Ask" is the topic Dr. Ralph E. Hillman will present at 8 p.m. tonight.

The talk, part of the E.A. Anderson Lecture Series presented by the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College, will be given in the Anderson Business Seminar Room on the third floor of Brock Hall on the Collegetale campus.

Dr. Hillman is an associate professor of speech and theater at Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro. A developer of communication workshops for industry, schools, and churches, he also communicates as a storyteller, puppeteer, and clown.

His M.A. in speech education was earned at the University of Iowa. After three years of teaching in Hawaii, he returned to the mainland and in 1972 was awarded a Ph.D. in speech education at Pennsylvania State University.

The father of three teenagers, Dr. Hillman has been involved in Cub Scouting and PTA activities. President of the Tennessee Speech Communication Association, he has written a number of papers, and currently provides communications training for Management Information Systems and the Douglas Group.

The public is invited to attend Dr. Hillman's lecture free of charge. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Final Registration Figures Show Increase

With the close of Tuesday, January 22, the last day for students to add classes, Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists had 1,475 students enrolled on its Collegetale and extension campuses. This time last year, SC had 1,465 students, giving a head count increase of seven.

However, the amount of full-time equivalency students is down from last year's total of 1,124 to 1,088. Also down is the total hours of enrollment, from 17,420 to 16,857. These statistics indicate that while enrollment has stabilized at Southern College, students are carrying lighter class loads.

SC Graduate Cuts First Album

Chris Hawkins, a 1983 graduate of Southern College, recently finished work on his first album and Don't Look Back, the album will be distributed nationwide. "The Lord has really been good to me," Chris says when commenting about the wide distribution. "Not everyone gets this privilege." Don't Look Back's music may be described as contemporary/easy listening. Only two of the songs have a fast beat. All of the songs are new, with the exception of two of them.

This opportunity for Chris was made possible when he recently signed a contract with Lamb Record Company of Nashville, Tennessee. The company currently is planning a tour for Chris, which will give him added exposure.

Southern College will have an opportunity to hear Chris Hawkins in person this weekend. On Friday, he will perform a sacred concert for that evening's vespers. On Saturday, at 5:30, he will perform another concert in Thatcher Hall; however, his songs will be more contemporary. Chris will sing numbers that have been made famous by Christian recording artists, such as Sandy Patty, Amy Grant, and Dallas Holm, as well as singing some of his own new songs.

On Saturday evening, his album will be available for purchasing. Chris says that the cassette tapes are not ready for release, but those that may want them, may order the cassettes on Saturday.
CLOSE SCHOOL DOWN IN BAD WEATHER

Dear Editor,

During the recent episodes of non-typical weather, it came to our attention that virtually all schools in the area were closed, except for a few glaring exceptions—most notably Southern College of Seventh-Day Adventists. Why this discrepancy between SC and other schools? Do Adventist college students and teachers have certain qualifications that make them better able to navigate in bad weather than everyone else? Is the snow and ice less treacherous on this campus than anywhere else?

True, most of the students live on campus and don’t have too far to travel from dorm room to school room, but what about the village students and faculty? These people risk life and limb (and car), struggling through the elements to get to school. And what about those who can’t make it at all? Is it right that some students have to miss class and go through the headache of making it up because they can’t get to school? Then there are the teachers who are stranded and miss their lecture.

We’ve heard that school is kept open because the students wouldn’t know what to do without classes and would go around terrorizing the campus. Is this true? This reason we find hard to accept.

Basically, what we’re wondering is why SC must stay open during this unusual weather while all other schools close? A statement concerning reasons and policies for the school opening or closing would be appreciated.

God Doesn’t Break Legs

Dear Editor:

It’s not often that I read an article in the Southern Accent that I don’t like or even disagree with. But Lori Heilman’s “Reflections” article in this last week’s issue left me wondering and just a little bit disillusioned.

I agree with the article in that we do not often heed God’s word, and it takes something drastic to help some of us see our mistakes. What I don’t quite understand is the fact that God is supposed to make these tragedies happen. I knew He allowed them to happen, but since when does He “break” our legs?

I was raised and taught to believe that our God today is the same loving Father who in Biblical times allowed Satan to hurt Job, yet protected him provision through his faith.

Even if we don’t have Job’s faith, I don’t think God resents to cruelty. Am I wrong? Has God changed?

If so, here’s to dictatorship, knowing God, and breaking a leg.

Eliza Wessell

Why, Mr. Editor?

Dear Editor,

As a Student Association officer, I hear quite a few remarks and am asked various questions about different aspects of the Student Association. I have heard quite a few “whys” and “hows” from the web, the “voice” of our Student Association. These include “Why aren’t there more personal classifieds?”, “Why doesn’t he try, Mr. Negron?” They include more funny humor and funny stories like the “Southern Cynic” of years past?”, “Why aren’t there more letters to the editor?”, “Why didn’t he publish the letter by my friend so in?”

I would like you to answer these questions, your policies, and give reasons for your policies to be what they are.

Michael Palgrave
Executive Vice-President of the Student Association and Chairman of the Publications and Productions Committee

Dear Mr. Palgrave,

The questions in your heart are ones that you and your constituents have a right to know. I will address each one individually and in as brief, yet complete, manner.

“Why aren’t there more personal classifieds?” To be honest with you, I have wondered about that myself in the beginning of the year, but I think we have a reason for why I didn’t put it in and what I will keep you updated. Essentially, I will put a personal ad in the Accent if the message is not distressing. For example, I received one referring to an individual’s sexual escapade earlier in the year. Obviously, it did not go in.

“Why doesn’t he include more humor and funny stories?” At the beginning of the school year, I attempted to have a “Southern Cynic” column. There were two problems that I encountered: 1) I did not find a writer that was willing to write that type of material, and 2) I did not like the material. 2) The name “Cynic” denotes a bitter mocking, which doesn’t fit a Christian paper. The Accent will continue on past.

Preparing to Fight the Battle

Reed Christiansen

The doctrine of the Great Controversy, simply that there is warfare between Christ and Satan, between good and evil, is fundamental to the Christian church. This spiritual warfare will continue until Christ comes again. Ultimately Christ will win. Goodness will prevail and righteousness will be the universal conditions forever.

This controversy is in each of our minds. We all recognize its existence. In every one of us there lies at least a spark of spirituality—a time when we feel the presence of God in our lives, a time when we feel the reality of the gospel.

In the discipline cases I have dealt with during my five and a half years at Southern, I have yet to see even what some might consider the most "hardened" individual want to leave. In the end each has wanted to stay because he realized that Southern College provides a hedge, however small, protecting them from the world. Likewise, in each of our lives there is a time when the things of the world seem in control or more appealing.

The question then is, how do we gain the victory in this battle? What can we do to help the "good side" win?

Each of us is unique; our experiences are different; but for me the battle must be won in the morning. If I am going to be victorious in the battle, I must make significant contact with the Lord Jesus at the beginning of my day before I face my responsibilities—before I relate with others.

To be meaningful, my time of contact must be structured. Haphazard worship has never brought growth and victory in my life.

My specific method is simple. I study my Bible primarily by books and paragraphs as opposed to topically. In attempting to analyze each paragraph, I list on paper the predicates of each sentence, then subjects and objects. I also use what are sometimes called in English classes "our six little friends"—who, what, where, when, how and why.

Probing takes time and effort. Sometimes I read a paragraph six or seven times and its meaning doesn’t stick; sometimes the meaning remains vague for months; then the light begins to shine when it is most needed.

Asking questions not only helps in the analysis of a specific passage, the process opacs the mind igniting an

...tend to put some humor into future issues. (Perhaps someone will be able to come up with a title for a humorous column.)

"Why aren’t there more letters to the editor?" and "Why didn’t he print the letter I or my friend sent in?" I cannot print a letter I do not get. Very few have come in this year. Some have come in, but were not signed. This year’s editorial staff will not print an anonymous letter because we believe that a person who has something to say should let his reading audience in on his identity.

I hope I have answered your questions satisfactorily, Mr. Palgrove.

The senate meeting of January 28 was one of concentrated "Senate Business." Senator Folkenberg, of precinct No. 5, resigned because of his new Social Vice President responsibilities. However, that precinct was replaced by a unanimous vote with John Dusinger.

Also, due to takeover of the Joker Supplement editorship, Senator Elwin was revoked from the publications committee and replaced by Senator Cole.

Senator Donna Wolber resigned her position as student representative to faculty senate because of her overloaded schedule and was replaced by Joni King, senior.

After all resignations and replacements were accepted, business moved on to a presentation of the upcoming Sweetheart Banquet by Senator Yaphing. Yaphing declared that the food at this banquet should surpass the quality of previous banquets.

A budget review by Treasurer Brownlow showed all expenses in order by the various organizations. Senator Parker gave a special presentation on the poor plane situation and senate voted to make another effort towards righting it.

The meeting ended with a reminder for all to get to Donkey Basketball Saturday night.

Campaign Digest News Service

Graphology: no, it’s not another one of those general education classes you’re required to take, but you may encounter it as you’re applying for jobs and even after you become a full-time employee.

Graphology is the study of loops, spaces, slashes and other distinctions of penmanship. About 1,000 businesses across the country (banks, ad agencies, automobile businesses, insurance firms, oil companies, etc.) are using handwriting analysis as an indication of an applicant’s general personality traits.

Through graphology, a trained analyst is supposed to be able to distinguish whether a person is trustworthy, dependable, honest, patient, determined, or any of a number of other traits.

The theory is that while the conscious mind concentrates on what is being communicated, the writer’s personality comes through in the height, slant, rhythm and shape of specific letters (somewhat like body language reflects a person’s real feelings).

Some companies are turning to handwriting analysis for an unbiased opinion on an applicant, since it’s unlikely the analyst has ever met the person.

Thinking patterns are shown in lowercase m’s and n’s, says Joan Christo, graduate of an 18-month correspondence course from Chicago’s International Graphology Society. Broad, rounded letters reveal a methodical approach, while the height of lowercase t’s and d’s reveal ego characteristics.

Depression and alcoholism can also surface through a person’s script. According to graphologist Sheila Kurts, an alcoholic’s handwriting often has disjointed j’s, and handwriting that slants downward may point to a depressed person.

Like some other analysis techniques—astrology, palmistry, hypnotist—graphology has an image problem. Many Americans put it in the "interesting, but not serious" category.

Still, if employers are giving the process some thought when screening prospects, applicants should also take it into consideration while applying for jobs.

If graphology’s track record initiates that of hypnosis’, however, that poor image could change. Hypnosis is now being used in many areas as an altitude builder and a stress aid; it’s trust-quotient is increasing. While many firms are afraid to utilize graphology because of the possibility of discrimination or invasion of private assurances, preferring instead to use the "wait-and-see technique,” neither the American Civil Liberties Union or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission have recorded a lawsuit based on handwriting analysis.
Collegedale's New Celebrity: John Brombaugh

By Lori Selby

Though much has been written in the newspaper about the new church organ, not much has been said about the smiling, white-haired builder.

John Brombaugh and his wife, Christa, have three children: Adrienne, Daniel, and Eric. Mrs. Brombaugh is a kindergarten teacher. The organ building business, John Brombaugh and Associates, Incorporated, located in Eugene, Oregon, keeps Mr. Brombaugh building in the shop most of the time. He says that about 20 percent of his time is spent traveling to install and tune his organs, as he is doing here in Collegedale.

Music and organ building have been lifelong interests of John Brombaugh. He started music lessons in the fourth grade and continued them on past college. Interestingly, his undergraduate studies at the University of Cincinnati, where he met his German wife, were not in music, but in electrical engineering. After graduation, he worked for the Baldwin Company on electronic organs. His organ interest followed him even to his honeymoon, part of which was spent looking at historic instruments in Europe from Hamburg to Amsterdam.

Back in the states, he continued looking at organs while pursuing a M.A. degree in engineering, with emphasis in acoustics, from Cornell University in New York. He wrote his Master's thesis on the acoustical properties of organ pipes.

John Brombaugh's organ building career began in earnest with a 3/4 year apprenticeship in Boston. During this time he built his first small organ for his own congregation, Trinity Lutheran Church, in Ithaca, New York. (This first organ was very similar to Collegedale's former little one, now located in Judy Glenn's office in the Music Building.)

After learning what he could from American builders, Mr. Brombaugh became a journeyman under an organ builder in Germany, one of the best in the world. When he finished his journeymanship in 1968, he already had clients waiting for him to build organs. He's been in business ever since.

Mr. Brombaugh says that through the physics, science, and electronic engineering have been valuable to him, organ building involves primarily cabinet making, woodworking, metalurgy and welding. An organ builder must be a specialist in many areas.

Mr. Brombaugh used his engineering background to design electronic tools to use in building and tuning pipe organs. He also uses a computer for technical designing and other aspects of organ building. While the Opus 26 has a historic architectural style and the Opus 27 is authentic late Renaissance-early Baroque style, Mr. Brombaugh also builds organs possessing a more modern architectural style.

Mr. Brombaugh seeks organ building as "recovering an old art." This year, 1985, is the 300th anniversary of Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the world's greatest and most prolific composers. Bach's compositions contained many marvelous organ works, which have to a large extent been unequaled in subsequent years. Mr. Brombaugh feels that is partially because many serious musicians have stayed away from modern electrical instruments, which cannot surpass an authentic pipe organ. He hopes building major pipe organs will one day foster the development of composers to rival Bach.

Organ building in the 16th and 17th centuries represented the most advance technical knowledge of civilization at that time—comparable to space exploration in our generation.

John Brombaugh's organ building has helped to rekindle a rare art and has combined it, by new tools and methods, with the technology of today.

News From Our Sister Campuses...

PUC Students Arrested for Embezzlement

Two former Pacific Union College students have entered a plea of not guilty to charges of forgery, burglary, and grand theft in a preliminary hearing held January 11, 1985.

The events leading to the arrest go back to September, when about $3,400 was taken from PUC in the form of payroll checks, according to Joe Corder, assistant business manager and controller. The thefts were discovered at the end of September when some checks were reported missing. He said, "We put a stop payment on the checks and then discovered that they had already been cashed." The school notified the sheriff's office Oct. 5.

Sheriff investigator Bob Little, one of the arresting officers, said that after they received the report, they started looking at the books and watching the business. He said that they had a "strong idea" who the suspects were by payday.

Keith May and David Lamberton, both 20, and an unidentified minor were arrested Oct. 11 by sheriff's investigators on suspicion of embezzling money from the College. The three were employed by Public Safety.

Corder said that about 20 student and faculty payroll checks were involved. The checks were deposited through a VersaPrint machine, which was one reason why Bank of America did not notice anything unusual, Corder said. The money was deposited lost to the account over a period of 45 days.

Corder said, "There is a good chance we (PUC) will recover all the money lost in the thefts."

A.U.C. President Resigns

Bob Jones

Atlantic Union College’s president has resigned to return to the classroom, according to Roma Archbold, College Relations and Community Development Director at the college.

Lewis announced his resignation from the presidency Jan. 9. Lewis will assume a teaching faculty position in the college’s psychology department. He has been AUC’s president for five years after serving four years as academic dean.

A search committee will be appointed by the college’s board of trustees before the end of the month. It will be the responsibility of the search committee to find someone to fill the vacant position, according to information from Earl Admunson’s office. Admunson is the Chairman of the Board of Trustees and President of the Atlantic Union Conference.

AU Begins New Physical Therapy Program

Andrews University recently announced the beginning of a new physical therapy program leading to the master of science degree in physical therapy, according to C. William Habenicht, associate professor and chairman of the physical therapy department.

The new program is the professional component which starts with the junior undergraduate year and continues through one year of graduate study. Classes begin in July and include 30 weeks of clinical education in affiliated institutions. The required two years of pre-professional courses may be taken at any accredited college or university, Habenicht said.

In making this announcement Habenicht said the program would “provide additional opportunity for Christian young people to enter service careers. It will also meet the present and future need for physical therapists in Adventist health care institutions.” Information about the program and application packets may be obtained by contacting the department of physical therapy, Andrews University, Berrien Springs, MI 49104, (616) 471-6011.

Alcohol Abuse in Teens

The biggest problem with drugs and alcohol abuse is that kids are beginning to use them at earlier ages. According to Robert Sibley, Commissioner of the State Mental Health Dept., the statistics show that 10 to 15 percent of all high school students use alcohol or drugs in excess. That amounts to around 50,000 teenagers in Tennessee. The findings also show that young people have their first drink between the ages of 12 and 18. Sibley pointed out that about 2.5 billion dollars is being invested in these products.

Blanton Drops Trial

Tennessee’s former Governor Ray Blanton dropped efforts to win a new trial from the U.S. Supreme Court. He is concentrating instead on moves to win his release from federal prison. Blanton is currently serving a three-year sentence at the prison camp near Montgomery, Alabama, after being convicted on liquor license conspiracy charges.

Meece in Hot Seat Again

Edwin Meece found himself in the Senate Judiciary Committee hot seat for round number two in his fight to become attorney general. Meece was nominated last January, but the nominations became bogged down in the controversy over his finances and ethics. No evidence was found that criminal charges should be brought against him. There are a lot of questions about his medical standards that have to be answered, however, but in the end the betting is that Meece will be confirmed quickly.

Moscow Makes Proposal

The thirty-five nation European Security Conference opened today in Stockholm with a proposal from the Soviet Union. Moscow delegates outlined a treaty that calls for the attending countries not be the first to use nuclear or conventional force. President Reagan previously said that he considered the concept of such a pledge, but western diplomats made no comment on Tuesday’s Soviet proposal.
Basketball

Steve Martin
Have you ever pondered what Rodney Dangerfield and a zebra have in common? Neither receives any respect. By Zebra, I mean a referee, which he is commonly referred to as.

Being a referee can be one of the toughest jobs in the world. Have you ever been standing in the middle of an open floor and had hundreds of people yelling, screaming, throwing foreign objects and treating you much worse than your mother ever would? There is nothing more disheartening than looking out into the crowd, looking for that one face, that one person you know will back you on every call, and discovering that he's staring holes into the floor, not wanting to acknowledge that he even knows you.

We're few, the proud, the refs never claim to be perfect. We're only human. What do you expect from us?

When you have ten bodies flying around the court and one lone soul comes up to you and says: "Hey man, didn't you see him slap my hand?!?!" There is only one reply... No way! Let's be for real. How can one person catch all the stippley things that transpire on the court and be fair about it?

Basketball is a physical game. There is going to be some shoving, pushing, scratching and tripping in every game. And, yes, I hate to admit it, but I must be honest. We will miss some of those calls. They do it in the NBA, so why can't we? It's nothing personal as many would tend to believe, we just call what we see.

It seems that some people think we're out to get them. I'll let you in on a little secret. There is only one thing a referee cares about in a basketball game... getting over as soon as possible. We could care less who wins the game, who fouls out or scores the most.

Now, before you pious sports experts yell at what seems to be a bad call, try wearing the striped shirt and whistle for awhile on one woman's game. Ponder these points, and the next time you see a referee giving a technical to a player, be assured he really would prefer not to. It's just his job!

TUESDAY

Green 76 McFadden 73
David Green's layup and foul shot with 3 seconds left lifted his team to victory over Tony McFadden's team Tuesday evening. McFadden squashed a 13 point first half lead as Green scored and clawed their way to a 44-43 lead early in the second half. Although Mark Murphy fouled out in the middle, Cain Davis stepped in and hit two crucial buckets and Bob Lento came off the bench and put in a couple of his own. Davis Green led with 31 points and Green himself added 18. Ken Warren led all scorers with 14 and Henry Coleman popped in 15 for McFadden (2-2).

Steve Hobbs scored 21 points while Mike McChang also hit for 21. Steve Jacobs and Bob Kamenn hit 17 points apiece for the losers.

Snider 45 Starbird 29
Ross Snider's team continued its roll as Snider had 28 points to lead all scorers. Alan Starbird led his team with 12 points.

Hobbs 66 Deely 57
Joe Deely's team led much of the game but made costly errors in the end as Hobbs capitalized on Deely's mistakes. For Hobbs, Aguiller scored 21 points while Mike McChang also hit for 21. Steve Jacobs and Bob Kamenn hit 17 points apiece for the losers.

Cain 72 Green 55
Cain rebounded from Sunday's loss to Mock with a convincing victory over David Green's team Monday evening. Captain Green led with 31 points, Davis Grunduskis added 18 points, and Bob Lento added 11. Cain's full court press forced 15 turnovers, and 13 of those were by Green. Cain took advantage of those turnovers and won the game by a 72-55 margin.

Greve 72 Deely 70
Deely jumped out to a 16-4 lead early in the game but soon found themselves leading only by three (18-15). Deely held the lead most of the game but lost it at Dole Tunell (24 points) got hot. Deely had a chance at the end but Steve Jacobs (32 points) missed a last second shot. Kent Greve and Don Welch added 13 points apiece for the winners.

Snider 36 Jones 34
Berry Kamel led Snider to a close victory hitting for 10 points while Snider added an 8 points for Jones. Jay Duxbee hit 12 points for Mike Aggas and Jay McElroy hit 10 points.

What do you think about the new WSMC format?

"I think it was a good change to cater to their audience—as long as they don't throw out things they've done."—Jerry Kawasaki

"I think it's one of the best stories Hour!"—Bob Folkenberg

"It bothered me on Sabbath. You lose a lot of the mood. Also, I think they should put "A Prairie Home Companion" on it. Otherwise, I approve."—George Turner

"They stated a reason for changing, but that wasn't the reason they changed it. They should have been more honest with the public."—Kevin Chin

"They've gone from baby stuff to more grown up stuff. They are consistent now."—James Wheeler

"They're pleased that WSMC is consistent in what they play. For us variety music type listeners, it'll just keep our cassette tapes ready."

ATTENTION FOOD BINGERS: For some time now you have been locked into a cycle of gorging on food and then purging either by forced vomiting, laxatives, diuretics, or continual dieting and fasting. You often feel unable to break this cycle. A group is now being started for persons struggling with this behavior pattern. If you are interested in joining us, please call one of these numbers: 396-2375 or 396-2709. Ask for Laura.

The Night of the Donkey

On February 2 at 8:00 p.m., the Student Association will be sponsoring its annual benefit. Come and watch as some of your favorite teachers or ministers are made fools of by donkeys. Donkey Basketball Night will cost all students three dollars in advance, three-fifty at the door.

Otis 67 Hobbs 66
Loren Grant had 26 points including a last second desperation three pointer to lift Otis over Hobbs. With 6 seconds remaining Mike McGaughey stood at the line shooting a one and one with Hobbs up by 2. McCaughey missed the front end of the one and one and Mark Hamblen grabbed the rebound and brought the ball up court. Hamblendishied off to Grant who dribbled once and fired up the last shot. Grant hit the shot while Otis had only 3 players in the game. Eric Hope led O’Neal with 25 while Ron Agger led all scorers with 30 points.

Jones 43 Sutton 37
Cory Sutton’s team fought back from behind all game long eventually sending it into overtime. In overtime however Sutton didn’t quite pull it together coming out of overtime. As Jones got hot, Jay McClusky had 16 points for the winners while Bob Demontchi hit 12 points for Sutton.

Malone 72 Wise 60
Anthony Perez (15 points) and Mike Dickerhoff (22 points) led Malone to an easy victory over Wise. Buck Perez and Dickerhoff were hot most of the game. Perez hit mostly from the outside while Dickerhoff was tough inside. Roy Collins pumped in 26 points for the losers.
Southern College Revamps

Its Division Organization

The Executive Committee of southern College met Tuesday, February 5, and gave final approval to three proposals forwarded by the divisional chairmen. "The current ten divisions are being squeezed into six and a new one is being added," said Bill Allen, Vice President for Academic Affairs. The organization is not a cost cutting measure but is intended to give every specialist branch of study the opportunity to have its own department and still be part of a division to get bigger projects done. The new academic plan is as shown, (see chart right.) At first glance the grouping of departments into divisions may not seem to be organized," said Allen, "but it is." The divisions are patterned along the lines of the general education group requirements.

The people who will be most affected, the current division chairmen, are not all convinced. One administrator said, "It will only put another obstacle of the organization between the administration and the teachers or students. We don't need that in a college this size."

Some administrators were very supportive of the plan however. Wayne VandeVeere, Chairman of the Division of Business and Office Administration, said he thought it would bring decision-making closer to the action. Other chairmen are also positive about the new plan. "I tend to be rasing optimistic," said David Johnson, "and I say let's try it. We can always change it later if it doesn't work." Steen also said that it would allow divisions to develop a "critical mass" that seems to be necessary to get major projects done.

The new plan should not have any effect on the students in the immediate future, said Bill Allen. There may be some changes in the general education requirements, but that will not take effect immediately.

Support Group for Bulimarexics Started

Dennis Negro

A support group for bulimacexics will be started in the women's dorm, Thatcher Hall, according to plans made by the group will be Laura Gladson and Linda Robertson, professional counselors in the community. This action is the final stage in what has been an awareness program directed towards the women of Thatcher Hall.

Last semester, Dr. Marlene Boekhout-White, a practicing psychotherapist who has researched eating disorders, presented a workshop on bulimacexis, an eating disorder that twenty percent of the United State's college women have. On Tuesday of this past week, the women were given the fourth talk within a period of two weeks on the same subject.

Although Millie Runyan, Dean of Women, realizes that the subject can become weary for many of the regular worship goers, she is concerned with what appears to be a rash of cases of bulimacexis among the residents of Thatcher. Mrs. Runyan believes that the national rate of twenty percent affiliation is a fair estimate of how many young women on campus have bulimacexis.

Bulimacexis was described as "binge/purge cycle" by Dr. Boekhout. She outlined the lecture last semester three levels of the affliction. A woman will start forcing herself to vomit as another method of weight control. She only purges on the occasions where she has overeaten to the feeling of discomfort.

The next stage is more severe. Irresponsibly, she begins gorging herself with food. Then purging becomes an everyday activity when she realizes that she can get rid of the food easily. The methods of purging are fasting, vomiting, and self-induced diarrhea.

Finally, this habit becomes a lifestyle, but at this point irreversible damage has been done to the body.

Mrs. Runyan relates that finding vomit in the restrooms and study rooms of Thatcher Hall has been a common occurrence, so much so that she has had to lock these rooms during the late evening hours. A woman will often use a public bathroom or a study room to vomit in because she wishes to hide the problem from her roommate.

Runyan points out that in past school years, vomit in these rooms were found not as often as not as often this year. One other difference is that the deans are now aware that the vomit may be from a bulimacexis. In the past, it was from a woman who was pregnant or who was drunk. Runyan says that until the knowledge she has now, she realizes that pregnancy or drinking may not have always been the problem.

The women's deans are terribly concerned about the problem because of the damage it can do. Runyan related an instance of an unnamed Orlando student who went on this bingeing/purging cycle. She eventually had to drop out of school. Today the woman has heart problems and many permanent side effects from her habit. Some women, she says, take up to one hundred laxatives a day in an effort to thoroughly purge themselves. This act may be damaging to the walls of the intestines.

Mrs. Runyan is pleased with the results of the awareness program. She said that many women are beginning to realize their problems. A part of the program that has effectively worked is an advertisement for a phone number women can call for help found in the classified section of this newspaper. She says that she does not know who has called although she has been told the response has been good. Runyan notes that this number is a reliable alternative to any woman who might not be assertive enough to participate in a group counseling section.

The sessions will meet in Thatcher Hall in the Annex section. The counseling is free of charge, and with the women's deans problem are encouraged to go.
Letters...

SORRY TO DISAPPOINT YOU...

Dear Readers,

I hate to disappointed some of you, but Dennis Negron and I are not "feeding" in the "Letters..." section of the January 31 Southern Accent. My reason for writing was to formally ask Mr. Negron to make certain things clear to you, the readers. I already knew the answers to my questions. Mr. Negron knew I planned to submit a letter. We not only work together in the Student Association, but also are friends. Neither of us intended that my question and his reply sound malicious. I feel that is unfortunate that people read so many negative things into something that is intended to be positive.

Thank you.

GC Encourages Participation in United Nation's International Youth Year

The Youth Department of the Seventh-day Adventist Church is encouraging Adventist youth around the world to participate in the 1985 United Nations International Youth Year.

International youth leader Leo Ranziolin of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists said the church encourages “each level of the church’s constituency to establish an International Youth Year Committee to plan and activate at least one program to celebrate the International Year of Youth.”

Ranziolin warned, however, that the church should avoid political entanglements. “Inevitably some political overtones will influence actions taken by an international body such as the United Nations, and the IYY is no exception,” he said. “Church constituencies should avoid political engagement of any kind. Rather, they should emphasize the positive aspects that the Year of Youth affords.”

Ranziolin said the church encourages a variety of programs centered on the IYY theme, “Participation, Development, Peace.” In the area of participation, Ranziolin said the Adventist church encourages its youth to “join in at least one community project or ask authorities for a special project for the church youth group that will help and bless the community as an ongoing benefit.” He also urged Adventist youth to participate in home and church activities.

Ranziolin said the church urges youth to develop their physical, mental, spiritual, and social powers. He suggests Adventist youth should sign up in regular programs to physically condition themselves, stretch their minds and engage in Bible studies and various kinds of community outreach.

“Peace is found in constant communication with each other and Saviour,” Ranziolin said. “Christian youth can experience true peace in a world in which they can anticipate eternal peace in the presence of the Lord.”

“These goals can be a reality for the church and individual through the ongoings of faith and sharing,” he concluded.
Changes and Choices

Desmond V. Rice

My children love to spend time on our computer at home. It is not too infrequently that disagreements arise as to who is monopolizing the time on it. However, there is one program due they love very much and which seems to take much of their time even while working together. It involves taking a journey. They have money available initially to purchase supplies, then start the journey. They have decisions to make, all along the way. Each thing with which they face choices results in further progress and growth, or sometimes calamitous setbacks. While their journey is only a game on the computer, in many ways it resembles the game of life we're involved in. Choices and changes seem to go hand-in-hand, especially when they are ours.

We are continuously confronted with change. Days change to weeks, to months, to years. Generally, the younger people are, the more rapidly they will shape their lives. When they pass, 1984 has passed, and 1985 is here. The Presidential elections came and went. The inquisition is over, and the country is asking for the implementation of change and leadership that could affect many aspects of our lives.

Some have not always found change easy to deal with. I know a faculty member on our staff who, with his older sister, were adopted when they were young. Some thirty years later, while teaching a class here at SC, he received a call from a scared, excited, nervous young lady, followed later by a call from an equally scared, excited, nervous young man who had been searching for a brother and sister they knew existed. Through photographs stored away in a shoebox by their mother before she died. That phone call and the calls that followed, along with an actual meeting with those brothers, brought about a profound change not only in his life, but in the life of his family. This sudden change confronted him and his family with choices—choices that would be very difficult for some to deal with. Should they accept or reject this young man and young lady along with their families and change whose way of life was different from theirs? They made their decision to accept them as they were and asked them to do the same. What was more important was that they had found one another.

Choices and changes are interrelated. Changes often lead to choices. Yet choices inevitably affect change. Often choices are not clear-cut. The most difficult are those that deal with the "gray" areas. As students and staff here at SC, we sometimes find ourselves learning how to relate to friends who choose to practice and believe differently from what we believe. Our level of tolerance of others would no doubt be reflected across the spectrum. I find nothing intrinsically wrong with that, except that with the passage of time and the results of maturity and study, we change, we make choices, we talk, and we grow. Our lives seem to be full of choices—whether to get up or stay in bed a little longer in the morning, to study or to watch a ball game, to wait for a date or to go on your own, to eat or to get to the next class on time—and the list can go on. For faculty and students, changes are being brought about in the Division structure of our college and with it come choices that might not only affect the way business is conducted in this institution, but it will also influence the lives of us all. Consequently, we need to be careful about the choices and changes we make.

Change in itself is neither good nor bad. Choices in themselves are neither good nor bad. Yet they are both inevitable. We come to those forks in the road, and we have to make choices as to which path to take, and our lives become changed from that point. Some decisions are irrevocable, and especially if they are based on poor choices our lives, our future, and the lives of those around may be hurt. We are all bound to make mistakes, but how we deal with those mistakes, the choices we make might just turn those mistakes into stepping stones leading to positive change in our lives.

SC Celebrates Black History Week

Shadia Elwin

Black History Week will be celebrated at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists from Feb. 11 through Feb. 16. Its theme is "We Have a Dream: Are We That Dream?" This annual event is sponsored by Beta Kappa Tau, Southern College's black club according to student Elissa Austin, chairman of the Black History Week Committee and former president of the club. BKT was formed with the purpose of enriching the social and spiritual lives of the black students.

Southern's student body of approximately 1500 includes about 150 black students.

Black History Week will place an emphasis on black history with a spiritual angle. This is the concept at which Miss Austin and Kerri Beker, President of BKT, have aimed the program.

Speakers of interest will include Dr. John Wagner, President of Southern College, and Angie Dickson, an evangelist from Dallas, Texas. Scheduled for Feb. 12 and 14 respectively, both meetings will take place in the Collegedale S.D.A. Church at 11:05 a.m.

Also scheduled is Garland Dunlan, Ph.D., Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. While teaching for Southern College, Dr. Dunlan was the first sponsor of BKT.

He is now a psychology professor at Oakwood College, a Seventh-day Adventist school in Huntsville, Ala.

Traditionally a black college, Oakwood will play an important part in Black History Week not only by loan of speaker, but also through the Oakwood College Choir which will give a concert Saturday, Feb. 16, at 6 p.m.

Richard Barron, associate world youth leader of the Seventh-day Adventist church, will be coming from Washington, D.C., to speak Feb. 15 at 8 p.m. and for the main service, Feb. 16 at 11 a.m. in the Physical Education Center.

Father-Child or Idol-Child:

Reinhold Smith

"Oh most Holy, Almighty, Life-giving Heavenly Father, we thank-you for another day of life, a day in which we can witness of your Beautiful, Unrelentless, Life-sustaining love."

A little deep perhaps? Are you bored yet? God probably is too. Have you had enough of pastors opening their prayers in this fashion? Isn't God our heavenly father? When you call your parents, do you use such sugar-coated adjectives? No, you simply say, Hello Dad, I need money.

Parents love you, provide for you, and care about your happiness. Isn't God the same, except on a heavenly level? If you were a father, how would you like your child to come to you and use the previously mentioned greeting in addressing you?

Now, I'm not advocating a lack of respect for God, but rather saying that you should treat him as a parent, not an idol.

About public prayer? Why do pastors, teachers, and lay-people with years of experience in public-speaking read prayers filled with meaningless adjectives? Of course, there isn't anything wrong with wringing out your prayer and reading it, if you have had no experience. Obviously the chance of a mistake from the pulpit would be higher. However, those with experience should pray from the heart or not at all.

Prayer should also be simple. After all, it is a conversation with God, much the same as a conversation with your earthly father.

Have you ever listened to a child pray? Christmas vacation I had the pleasure of listening to my nine-year-old nephew pray, and it went something like this:

"Dear Father, thank-you for loving me, Mom and Dad, Grandma and Grandpa, and Uncle Ron. Forgive my sins, help the missionaries, the flowers not to die, and the cowboys and indians not to fight. I love you, good night."

I sat back and thought: How simple, just as if God himself was in the room, like a friend. You know what, He was.

The reward of a thing well done, is to have done it.

Emerson
Jonathan Wurl

Jonathan Wurl and Cameron Cole are running unopposed and are on the same ticket for the 1985-86 school year. Wurl's campaign is a junior chemistry major and Executive Vice President candidate Cole is a sophomore biology major.

When asked, Wurl and Cole stated that they wished to run together for the same goal: to encourage student involvement. Said Cole, "I feel that the words 'Student Association' have lost their meaning. We need to put the 'student' back into 'Student Association'."

Wurl added that he was "proud of the S.A. and wishes to promote a 'sense of pride among all the students.'" Both put prime importance on interaction between the students and S.A.

Wurl's experience includes temperance president his freshman year in academy, S.A. president his sophomore year, junior class pastor, and senior class president.

Cole's academy experience includes student council treasurer his freshman year and S.A. treasurer his senior year. Also, he is senator and assistant to editor this year.

Lori Heinsman

Lori Heinsman, sophomore mathematics and journalism major, is the sole runner for Southern Memories Editor.

Heinsman, who is from Orlando, Florida, would not tell her plans for the Memories, since she wishes to keep an "element of surprise." But she does emphasize the goals of a very accurate index and an alive yearbook.

Explains Heinsman, "I want the pages to come alive as we capture the moments in picture. Also, I want the write-ups to give a real feeling of reliving the events."

Her long list of experience includes yearbook photographer her junior academy year and newspaper feature editor her senior year. She also worked for her hometown newspapers.

Presently, Heinsman is a senior, writer of "Dear Lori," Accent reporter, and copy editor for Memories.

Cameron Cole

drushes..."

Both put prime importance on interaction between the students and S.A.

Wurl's experience includes temperance president his freshman year in academy, S.A. president his sophomore year, junior class pastor, and senior class president.

Cole's academy experience includes student council treasurer his freshman year and S.A. treasurer his senior year. Also, he is senator and assistant to editor this year.

Brannon Francois

The office of Vice President for Student Development has four candidates running for it. The first one is Brannon Francois. Brannon is a freshman biology major. His hometown is New Orleans, Louisiana. Mr. Francois feels qualified for this job because he has had a lot of experience as a leader on the high school level. Some of his leadership positions are Student Association President at Bass Memorial Academy, senior class secretary, boys' club leader, and a resident's assistant.

Brannon says that as a freshman, he can instill fresh ideas in the SA. One of his ideas that he would implement if he were elected would be a service to approved ballgames and concerts.

Carol Huenergardt

Our first candidate for the position of Social Activities VP is Carol Huenergardt. She is a freshman from Ceres, California. Carol feels that she is qualified for the job because she is organized, flexible, enjoys doing things for the students, and is a perfectionist in her work.

Carol has quite a few activities for her to see put into effect, such as a day in the middle of the week for the students to come away from their studies and have a little time to converse and relax for awhile, more trips to the Alpine slide, a road rally, and a larger variety of Saturday night activities.

Bill Bass

The second candidate for the office of Vice President for Student Development is Bill Bass. This junior religion major makes his home in Charlotte, North Carolina. Bill feels that he has the experience to satisfy Southern College's students' needs the best. Formerly a boys' club president in academy, he currently works as a senator, as a resident's assistant, and for Instructional Media.

Despite one of the smaller budgets in the SA, Bill says that he can work with it and provide some good services. Some of these are as follows: trips on certain Sunday mornings to Atlanta malls, the return of Pink Panther cartoons, and more cookie breaks during the course of a day.
Sherry Beardsley

Our second candidate is Sherry Beardsley. She is a freshman from Kansas City, Kansas. Sherry has had previous experience working with an S.A. organization at Forest Lake Academy, where she was the S.A. treasurer her senior year. She said that she also helped out with planning several social activities as well. Sherry would really like to see the school spirit of Southern uplifted and would like to plan some sort of school-spirit day. She would like to see more of the students getting involved with activities and says that she is open to all ideas and suggestions.

Bob Jones

Bob Jones is a junior communications/journalism major from Leominster, Massachusetts and is running for Accent editor. He is currently the Layout Editor for the school newspaper. He feels that he is qualified for this job for many reasons. One of the main reasons is that Bob has been working on a newspaper staff since his high school years. He hopes to make the paper more balanced in the choice of articles and he wants all to know that he is open for ideas.

Brent Van Arsdell

The second candidate for Editor of the Southern Accent is Brent Van Arsdell, from Lockport, Illinois. Brent is a reporter with the Accent this year and has been layout editor in the past. He feels that his strong point is not only his previous experience, but that he is a good budgeter. Brent feels that with his good budgeting skills, he can create a better paper. He promises that he will do the best job possible and will have the "stick-to-interest" to get the job done.

Ed Santana

Ed Santana is our third candidate for this office. He is a freshman theology major from South Lancaster, Massachusetts. Ed lists his qualifications for this leadership position as follows: vice-president for his school's student government, president of the same school's Spanish club, two years experience as a logistics officer in the ROTC, and currently a senator at Southern College.

Ed sees no problem with getting his job done efficiently and correctly. "I think I can do the job, and I want to do the job," he says. He did not wish to divulge any of his plans for next year should he get the office, but Ed plans to put out a survey to find out what students want.

Julio Narvaez

Our final candidate for the office of Student Services is Julio Narvaez. Julio is from Mayaguez, Puerto Rico, but is a Mexican citizen. He lists his qualifications simply as a hard worker, a good organizer, and a good handler of finances. Our candidate has had leadership experience before, but he feels they are unimportant to the position. The qualities above are enough, according to Julio.

Julio would like to provide more traveling information to students for vacations, help keep the students more informed, plan more trips to fine arts and sporting events, and much more. He too plans to take a survey to find out the likes of the students.

Paul Ware

The only candidate running for the position of Joker editor is Paul Ware. Paul is a sophomore history major working on his pre-medical requirements. Our candidate resides in Newport News, Virginia. He has had no publishing experience, but plenty of leadership experience, such as senior class vice-president, junior class president, freshman class president, and boys' club secretary/treasurer.

Because the Joker is a publication of the school, Paul did not want to divulge any of his ideas, but he plans to put out a creative, neat Joker. His main objective for next year is to get the booklet out on time and into the hands of the students as soon as possible.
Ride 'Em Cowboys!

On Saturday evening, a crowd of approximately 800 people saw the SA officers and some of Southern College's faculty and administrators, along with some of the area ministers, perform in the annual SA Benefit. Perhaps a more appropriate way of saying it is the crowd watched the above performers make donkeys of themselves. This year's SA Benefit event was Donkey Basketball. Actually, the donkeys were the performers as they backed, kicked, ran away from their riders, played stubborn, and had "accidents." And the riders simply had to allow all of this to go on to play within the rules of the game.

The evening festivities had the ministers playing the teachers in one game and the SA officers and administrators playing in another. The teachers and administrators won their respective games and went on to play a championship match. The teachers won this final game.

"Awards" were given out at the end of the night. Some of the more notable ones were Assistant Professor of English David Smith's High Scorer Award and Treasurer Robert Merchant's Best Rider Award.

The new critical-analytical research categories, 1984-85 prizes contest announcing 1985.

Writing Committee
Announces Research Contest

The Southern College Writing Committee is announcing its fifth annual writing contest for spring semester 1985. This year there will be two categories, one for library research papers and one for critical-analytical papers. Three prizes will be awarded in each category: $75-first prize; $50-second prize; and $25-third prize.

The library research paper category is open to typed research papers of 1200-1700 words that were written for a class assignment during the 1984-85 school year. The critical-analytical category is a new one for this year. It includes a wide variety of writing done for class: critical book reviews; analysis papers; investigative reporting and journalistic essays; interpretive case studies; position papers; laboratory/experimental papers; and field study investigative reports. Entries should be between 750 and 2500 words and, of course, should be typed.

Registration forms are available at the Student Center, the Religion Department, the Arts & Letters Division office, and at Duane Houck’s office in Hackman Hall. Papers must be submitted by April 5. Prizes will be presented at Awards Chapel on April 18.

After a month of play, the College Bowl has taken some interesting turns. Monday, February 4, saw one more team eliminated from competition, leaving nine out of a field of twelve original teams vying for the championship.

Chip Cannon lost to Alice Roszyk in a match that saw the loser come up five points short of a tie upon answering the last question with time running out. The final score was 205-200. Although at times Roszyk seemed to be taking command of the game, Cannon refused to bow under pressure. With two minutes left in the game, Cannon's team, down 205-170, answered two toss-ups and part of a bonus question but ended up short five points. With two losses in the College Bowl, Cannon was eliminated from play. Also on Monday evening, in a game matching two of the teams favored to win the championship, Russell Duerksen edged Keith Goodrum in the last two minutes. This game was similar to the one above in that Goodrum also seemed to have the game locked half way through the match before Duerksen mounted a comeback. The final score was 250-235.

With the loss, Goodrum joint Hebbs and Wolbert, three of the top four seeds, in the consolation bracket. A second loss will eliminate any of these teams. Already eliminated are Steve Wrate, Liz Cruz, and Chip Cannon.

Tonight's matches feature Mid Acosta vs Alice Roszyk and Zeli Ford vs Donna Wolbert. The first match will start at 5:15 p.m. before the curtains in the cafeteria. The second game will start five minutes later.

SC Student Diana J. Green Honored in Washington

Jook Tung Shin

On Wednesday evening, February 6, there were two important events at the Capitol. There was a speech by the President before that but before there was a reception for Congress to present Diana,” said Dr. D. W. Holbrook, Holbrook, President of Home Study International (HSI), was reporting to the employees of HSI at a luncheon at General Conference Headquarters the following day.

David L. Peoples, President of NHSC said at the reception, “The National Home Study Council conducts a Home Study Graduate-of-the-Year program. Seventy years old graduates were judged on their academic records and the level and quality of their contributions to their chosen fields. Judges chose 12 finalists.” (One of the members of NHSC is the Air Force that runs the largest home study school enrolling over 300,000 students.) Four of the finalists will receive certificates, another four will go to the national NHSC convention in Florida, and the top four were recognized at the Congressional Reception. “In that top four,” Holbrook reported later, “the Home Study Institute candidate was number one!”

Holbrook’s introduction of Diana brought laughter. “This little girl that we’re so proud of studied in such exotic and strange places as Beruit, Asmara, Gimbis, Libya, Crete, and considerably.” When he continued, “She’s a delightfully sparkling and exuberant girl, and I want the judges to know that she’s only one in a long line of graduates of Home Study International that will be honored here every year.”

Holbrook estimated that about ten Senators and twenty Congressmen showed up. Even though Diana, who voted for the first time in the past election, had voted for both of them, she was nevertheless surprised when both Representative Marilyn Lloyd, 3rd District of Tennessee, and Senator Albert Gore, Jr., of Tennessee, were on hand to present the award which said, “Outstanding Home Study Graduate Award. The National Home Study Council recognizes the outstanding academic achievement and exemplary contributions to the public rendered by Diana J. Green, Graduate of Home Study International.”

Diana’s mother, Eppy Green, flew here from Africa to be with her in Washington.

Also accompanying her were Jill Green, her grandmother of Atlanta, Cynthia Leul, her aunt of Collegedale, Jerry Kovalski, Southern Accent reporter and photographer, Gritel Rivera and Karen Williams, two of her friends.

Home Study International is operated by the SDA Church and joined the NHSC in 1965. The morning after the Congressional Reception, Diana was introduced to the General Conference family at morning worship.

A luncheon at noon was held at the General Conference Headquarters cafeteria by Home Study International. Most of the employees of HSI were there. Although Diana was not given an opportunity to speak at the Congressional Reception, she was given an opportunity to tell how she viewed the whole matter, “Why not? There’s a lot more people out there who deserve it. Then I decided well, maybe so, but I’ve been privileged and honored and maybe the Lord wants me to have it. I really appreciate it.”

Health Care Systems Topic of Next Anderson Lecture

Ronald J. Wylie, a lawyer from Washington, D.C., will present “If You Like Revolution, You’ll Love the Health Care System” tonight, Feb. 14, at 8 p.m. in Brock Hall.

Mr. Wylie is currently special assistant to the administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA), U.S. Department of Health and Medi-Cal programs which comprise approximately 10 percent of the entire Federal budget.

“If Medicare and Medi-Cal were considered a private corporation, these programs together would be the second largest corporation in the country,” Mr. Wylie points out. Health care services have provided for over 10 million people, elderly, and disabled Americans. Expenditures on their behalf will total nearly $100 billion in fiscal 1985.

After receiving his bachelor’s degree from Andrews University, Mr. Wylie went on to receive his law degree from the University of Michigan Law School, where he was a finalist in the Freshman Moot Court Competition.

A member of the Michigan, District of Columbia, and U.S. Supreme Court Bars, he has practiced law served in the office of the Commissioner of the Administration on Aging, and was the Director of the Regulations Policy Staff, U.S. Food and Drug Administration. He has lectured on “Conflict Prevention and Resolution” and has authored several articles.

Mr. Wylie’s presentation is part of the 1985 E.A. Anderson Lecture Series, an annual feature of the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College. The series is being held in the E.A. Anderson Business Seminar Room on the third floor of Brock Hall.

The public is invited to attend any of the lectures free of charge. “About 50 of the students and community individuals attending the series are enrolled for college or continuing education credit,” says Dan Rozell, associate professor of business and director of the series.

A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Heritage Singers to Give Concert at Southern College

Shelby Elwin

The Heritage Singers, an internationally known singing group, will present a gospel concert in the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church on Tuesday, Feb. 19, at 7 p.m.

The 12-member group of singers and musicians recently returned from a second European tour, including performances in London, Paris, and Geneva. Tours have also taken them to Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. The group is based in Placerita, California.

Known for their rich and harmonious blend of voices, the Heritage Singers have received five Angel Awards from Religion in Media. This Los Angeles-based organization judges for excellence in religious and moral quality media and recognized them in a vocal group of the year, best television series for “Keep On Singing,” and best albums.

“Today marks the fourteenth season of the Heritage Singers’ sharing the love of Jesus Christ through testimony and song,” comments Max Mace, founder and director of the Heritage Singers. “Our sole objective is bringing people to Jesus through Christian music.”

Admission is free, and the public is welcome. The group has made over 40 records and tapes.

LANGUAGE MAJORS TO GROW

I regret that your informative tabulation on the front page of the July newsletter indicates that there are no modern language majors on campus. It is true that the number has dwindled to an all-time low of one, though another has recently decided to change his major to French. Our campus does have three other students, however, who are attending Adventist Colleges Abroad: two at Colgate and one at Saginaw. These students will return to us with a modern language almost completely, if not entirely so.

We expect the number to grow dramatically when word gets around that several southeastern states will soon require two years of high-school language in order to enter the state university system. Florida, for example, is already beginning a search for more than 100 certified teachers of Spanish.

 Truly yours,
Robert R. Morrison, Chairman
Division of Arts and Letters

SCS HISTORIC DECLARATION

Although, we the people of the United States have come a long way since our forefathers first devised the Declaration of Independence, perhaps, as United States citizens, and students at Southern College, it would be appropriate for us to follow the principles of a revision of such a declaration to fit with the policies of Student Association elections.

"When in the course of Southern College events, it becomes necessary for one student body to dissolve the political bands which have connected with another (JT and Company), and to assume among the Powers of the Student Association, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of the Student Association and of the Student Association Constitution entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of the students requires that the Student Association officers-elect should declare the causes which impel them to their separate positions."

With all due apology to JT.

VOTE! Please

After four years of noticing that students do not bother to vote during Student Association elections, this year I feel that a plea for a better turnout is in order. Last year less than fifty percent of the students voted. That figure is lower than the national turnout for most presidential elections in this century. Yet in SA elections, a student does not have to go through complicated registration processes, take time away from class or work to make the trip to a voting area, or stand in long lines. In fact, voting for SA officers is made as simple as possible for the student. He may cast his vote in the dorm, at the Testing and Counseling Center, or at chapel sometime during the day from 9:00 a.m. to dorm closing time. The procedure takes a pencil and five minutes and no more.

With all due respect to our current SA President, J. T. Shim, I have at times wondered if he would be in office if more people had voted last year. Shim won by the narrow margin of ten votes. If ten more of Denise Read's supporters had turned out, a special election would have been in order. The voter apathy of Southern College students may have been the deciding factor in that race, and not the supporters of Shim.

This year, only three of the races have more than one person running for it, which is unfortunate. But that fact does not detract from the importance of the students' voting. Not one of the candidates for the offices of Vice President for Social Activities, Vice President for Social Services, and Accomplished Editor would feel happy about a loss by only ten votes with less than fifty percent of the student body voting. Still, the importance of voting for next year's elected officers is that they will help shape the face of 1985-86. If a student wants a good year, then he should vote. And from the feedback that SA officers get when something does not go right, most students want a good year.

Next week, February 21, Thursday, Southern College will hold its SA elections. I would be happy with a sixty-percent turnout. The amount is not unrealistic. It can happen by SC students simply heeding the plea to vote.
“Frankly, My Dear, I Don’t Give A Flip”

Lori Heisman

How many of you read the Lewis Grizzard column in the Chattanooga Times Tuesday, January 22? It was titled “Not even Wayman C. Warnamaker can push in the same league as Al Pacino.” Having heard about Scarface, Pacino’s movie, I read this editorial. It prompted me to give some thought to the dirty language, nudity, and violence that we see in movies and on television.

Grizzard explained that Pacino “plays a Cuban punk who becomes a high-rolling dope dealer in Miami by going around shooting and killing people.” However, violence is not the only reason the film was rated R. Grizzard points out, “It was the nonstop use of nasty language...There was one dirty word, as a matter of fact, that was used over and over in the movie. Al Pacino didn’t say two other words before saying that word again.” This word is described as being perhaps the most taboo word in our language.

After further description of the film, Grizzard writes, “I think it’s time Hollywood cooled it on the excess of graphic language, or our current bad words will lose their shock value...You know where all this started though. It started when Rhet Butler said to Scarlet O’Hara, ‘Frankly, my dear, I don’t give a (censor’s) in Gone With the Wind.’ “If Rhet had said, ‘Frankly, my dear, I don’t give a flip,’ then talking dirty in the movies might never have reached its current depths.”

Right on Grizzard! My sentiments exactly. Real men don’t (or real women). It’s dirty, impolite, immature and exhibits a limited vocabulary. Now does it make much sense most of the time. Why cry out for “in安卓itude” when you burn your fingers? An ice cube would be more appropriate.

It’s not fair, though, to just harp on causing in movies. The same goes for nudity. It has gotten away, way out of hand. Sure, we’re adults. We are old enough to see what the human body looks like. So we defend PG-13 movies, nasty TV shows, and the weird videos on MTV on that assumption. “We don’t listen to that stuff, Dad, so don’t get up flak.” But Dad’s not just worrying about us. He’s concerned about the grade school kids. They grow up watching casual sex on TV, and violence made fun and exciting. Criminals are heroes. Isn’t anything sacred anymore?

Think about it. Instead of just brushing it off because “Adventists don’t do that stuff” (or do we?), think about it. When we were kids, we watched Little House on the Prairie. Now kids start out with watching the PG and R rated flicks they see on HBO. Soon that won’t be entertaining enough, so they will watch heavier and heavier stuff. How far will they creep up the smut scale? That rung will just reach without feeling that anything is out of the ordinary or wrong?

It’s time we started thinking about our environment. What about protecting our minds?

Sweetheart Banquet a “Why a Black History Week?”

Matt Larkin

Sunday, February 10, the Student Association Sweetheart banquet took place at the Chattanooga Choo Choo’s Imperial Ballroom. Guests were seated by Co-Vice Presidents for Social Activities, Mitsue Yapping and Bob Folkenberg, in the large dining room whose chandeliers expanded to ten feet wide.

Students and faculty dined buffet style to a dinner that included two entrees, an assortment of vegetables, a salad bar, and dessert.

The evening’s entertainment included various romantic songs performed by SC students. Mitsue Langle and Bob Jimenez sang “Take a Chance,” Harry Brown gave his rendition of Lionel Ritchie’s “True,” and Aimee Ota sang “Only You.” The singers were accompanied by Alicia Williams, Kim Deardorff, and Jonathan Wurl. A magic show was performed by Jim Hucnegard, “The Spends,” a low-budget Southern College group, made up of Cameron Cole, Dennis Golightly, Andre Skalao, and Scott Kemberger, performed various skits, one of them being their version of Cheech and Chong’s classic, “The Three Little Pigs.”

A romantic atmosphere was achieved by both the elaborate place and by the serenaded violin music performed by Paul Williams at each table.

The evening concluded with the film, The King and I. Several students commented favorably about the banquet, especially the food. One student said, “This has been the best food I’ve had out of the eight banquets I’ve attended.”

Harry Brown III

On the campus of Southern College, this question has been addressed to me personally and via other means, such as the Chatter and the Southern Accent. From the frequency which this question has been asked and interaction with my peers, I have been compelled to provide some insight on this question for some of you. I could spend many hours, which I have done in the past, discussing the positive and negative factors, sociological aspects, and reasons for a Black History Week (BHW), but will not because of the time and space required and the interest level of some readers, but I will discuss the philosophy upon which BHW and other anniversaries have been originated.

Most of what I have observed over the last three and one-half years is the attitude with humanity. There is a bond that exists between all individuals who are created, Infinite Love. This He did so that we may have a glimpse of the great and beautiful God He is love. Without God/Love, we have no value.

As it says in Romans 12:9, 10, “Let love be without hypocrisy. Abhor what is evil; cling to what is good. Be devoted to one another in brotherly love; give preference to one another in honor...practicing hospitality...Respect what is right in the sight of all men. If possible, so far as it depends on you, be at peace with all men...overcome evil with good.”

As patriots of our great nation of freedom, The United States of America, and more importantly as citizens of the Kingdom of Christ, we can join in the celebration of recognition of the reunions of our brothers and sisters from all corners of the earth and take pride in this Southern College of Seventy-six Adventist Afro-American anniversary.

[Signature: GUILLERMO]
Dear Students,

Did you know that last year less than half the student body voted in the S.A. elections? The enrollment last year was around 1,400, yet less than 700 of you took the time to vote. Why didn’t more students vote?

Each year a part of your tuition goes to the Student Association. The people you elect are the ones who will spend this money. Don’t you want to get your money’s worth?

Read the qualifications and goals of the candidates. Decide who to vote for, and then follow through with your decision and vote on Feb. 21st. Vote for the candidate you feel will do the best job for you, and the rest of the student body.

If elected I pledge to do my best to provide you with a paper that you look forward to reading.

Sincerely,

Robert Jones

P.S. I would also do my best to have more correspondance from, and coverage in the paper about the happenings on the Orlando campus, to further unify the two campuses.

New Home Ec Teacher Added to Staff

Joan King

If you like the unique sound of an Australian accent, Diane Fletcher is a good person to talk to. She is a native of Sydney, Australia, and has come to Southern College this year to teach home economics.

Fletcher first came to the U.S. to get a Master’s Degree at Pacific Union College. Then she returned to Australia to teach home ec at Avondale for a year. After that stint, she came back to the U.S. to get her doctorate in home ec education and nutrition at Texas Women’s University. She has finished all the course work and is now working on her dissertation.

Miss Fletcher received her original background in home ec from her mother who is a dietitian. The art of cooking and sewing was sort of a family tradition. Miss Fletcher was cooking for the family on occasions and sewing for contests by the time she was twelve.

She became inspired to make a career of it in seventh grade when a home ec teacher taught so poorly that she determined to learn how to do it right.

There is saying that says: A full stomach with homemade clothes thrown in, is about all some people think home ec is. It certainly is more of a complicated combination of science and art than most people think, when one talks with someone knowledgeable. Aside from the usual nutrition and meal management classes, Miss Fletcher also teaches classes in quantity foods (mastering the art of making food in big amounts without wrecking the taste) and teaches seminars in home ec which cover current research and topics with some discussion on ethics. She is also adding some new classes to next year’s bulletin called “Life Skills” and “Creative Cuisine.”

Miss Fletcher has some innovative ideas like the Valentine’s cookies she helped interested students to make. She is creative and will add a lot to Southern College. The Accent welcomes her.

Too Far To Walk?

Jack Wood

"Too far to walk" going once, going twice, going twelve times as an answer from college students at Southern when asked how they feel about attending classes in Brock Hall. In an informal poll, out of a total of twenty students, twelve mentioned that the walk is too long. It seems that the distance between the dorms or other school buildings and the 23 million dollar classroom-office building has students leaving fifteen minutes earlier for class.

Freshman Maribel Soto said, "It is much too far to walk for just one class." She explained that her other classes are all located in buildings situated close together, and she finds it very irritating to walk all the extra way for one class. Another student voiced her opinion by saying that the school should have built Brock Hall closer. When asked to elaborate, she replied, "They should have torn down Jones Hall earlier and built it there."

Most students showed a positive attitude towards the new structure, but there still was a hint of aggravation for the long walk. Sophomore Scott Clemmons says, "The building is neat, a lot nicer to attend than the other buildings, but I freeze my can off walking to it in the winter."

The question is now brought up whether or not there should be a longer break in between classes to allow students enough time to hike from one end of campus to the other. The students find this idea to be a way to deal with the accumulated tardies because of the long walk.

New Plant in Chattanooga

The world's largest manufacturer of earth moving and industrial equipment has its eye on Chattanooga for a new plant. The National Debt

The national debt, according to 3rd District Congresswoman Marilyn Lloyd, will be the primary topic of upcoming Congressional sessions. The Congresswoman met with Reagan aide last week and says that all agree that if the budget deficit is not diminished, Reagan's 97 billion dollar fiscal budget will push interest rates even higher. Lloyd added that cuts in Social Security and economic development programs are not the way to pay for the national debt.

New Jail and Court Systems

The local city county jail committee is settled on a consultant to study the possibility of merging all the separate jail and court systems. Committee Vice-Chairman Tom Caldwell says that Moyer and Associates will look at 3 different options, all of which would keep the facilities in the downtown area. Moyer will charge about 50,000 dollars for the work. Committee members feel that this is a relative bargain.

Five thousand South Dakota farmers attended a big rally in Pierre Tuesday to draw attention to conditions they say have pushed 900 South Dakota food producers to the brink of bankruptcy court. Other farmers say that they need help in securing loans so they can plant next spring. They also need help re-structuring the loans that they now have that carry such high interest rates they can barely pay the interest alone.

Hey Double A! One question.
"Why so fast?" You think you’re worn out after a game? You ought to see the fans drag themselves out of their seats messaging the backs of their necks. I was watching a Double A game with a friend of mine once.
15 minutes of fast break misses, intercepted passes, and just typical Double A run-and-gun basketball, a light bulb appeared over my friend’s head.
This is not to downgrade Double A basketball. You guys have worked hard to get where you are now—deserve it. Just don’t make every play like there’s only two seconds on the clock. Take the fastbreak if it’s there, but if not slow it down and set up the shot. Oh, and remember, you DO have teammates!
Next week look in “Hefty’s Bag.” I’m sure you won’t want to miss it!

The following poem was found in the Student Center and given to the Southern Accent.

If once knew a place where I could hide
Where on a secret road my dreams would ride
There, with no mist, my future dreams lay
There, I would bear a fantasy alone in a day
When I went to that place, I knew how
That I fashioned my fantastic dreams into you.
Now the secret place is filled with bitterness and tears
And my happy, laughing dreams, my heart no longer bears.
My secret place is no longer a beautiful relief
But aדעך"א of sadness and relentless grief
The common enemies of my heart still cry
With flowing sorrow and desolate tears
The once upon a time when my soul was free
It was in chains, drained always
Once my heart heard the joyful tales of content
Through all my grief, and past sorrow
The keeping still sings on the moor.
Free, this poem seems ever ending
But, a numeral of hope and endings
Yes, it will be a struggle of standing and wave
But tomorrow is the first day of the rest of my life.

Kim, Happiness is having a friend who laughs at your stories when they’re not so good—and symp-iizes with you in your troubles, even when they are not so bad! Happy Valentine’s Day!
Love ya, Jack

To a little waltz of a girl, “Picking you up” has made the last year and a half of my life very meaningful and also very happy. With my anticipation for a beautiful future and all my love. I wish you Happy Valentine’s Day!

Dear RED,
56849, I only have love enough for you. It takes the middle and both ends. It overflows and I find it impossible to keep in control. I respect you. I have laughed and cried with you. I have dreamed and been unfriendly with you. We have climbed mountains and conquered them together. The time that we have had I will always cherish. And this is just to tell you how very much I care. Happy 14th.
With much love,

Dear Nicky,
I think I'm finally growing up and learning to be open with my trust and feelings; realizing that even the best friends might not always be there. That's all the more reason to take advantage of the present and let you know how special you are to me and how I appreciate your encouragement and me as an individual and my abilities. Thank you, Nick. Happy Valentine's Day.

SC Is Cheap!

Comparison of College Costs 1984-1985

College | Tuition | Room/Board | Fee | Total
---|---|---|---|---
Walla Walla | $5,640 | $2,242 | $65 | $7,948
Pacific Union | 5,775 | 2,722 | | 8,500
Union | 5,800 | 1,650 | | 7,450
Southwestern | 4,576 | 2,516 | 54 | 7,192
Atlantic Union | 5,025 | 2,480 | | 7,505
Oakwood | 5,375 | 3,000 | 225 | 8,100
Columbia Union | 3,663 | 1,920 | 66 | 5,640
La Sierra | 5,310 | 2,391 | 174 | 7,875
Southern | 4,800 | 2,180 | | 6,980
Scripps | 5,775 | 2,460 | | 8,235

The information from this chart was taken from a document prepared by Richard Reiner, former business manager of Southern College. Our thanks to the people who cooperated with us while we researched this material.

The fall of the dollar to about $1.65 per British pound is a close tie in the cost of college, but it is a fact that expensive to complete your education here than at most Seventh-day Adventist colleges in North America, according to 1984-1985 statistics. A quick look at one aspect of your cost to attend college, however, will not give you a clear picture of the actual overall cost you will incur. I soon found this out as I began to compare the housing, tuition, fees, and so on. Whereas SC is a close third for room and board costs, its lowest tuition cost is Oakwood College, charging only $3,663 (based on $3.84 statistics) for an average class load.

Student Association fees and other miscellaneous fees also make up a full part of the total budget. Some schools charge a percentage of the tuition cost. Educational Opportunity, however, charge an outright cash fee for the privilege of being a member of the Student Association. The 4% reported fee is Atlantic Union College which charges $225 for general and SA fees. The lowest is Southwestern College which only asks for $5.

But the bottom line to all this is: Who is the cheapest? According to all statistics available, we find that Andrews University costs the most to attend, with an estimated expenditure of $8,505, while Oakwood has the privilege of being the cheapest, estimating only $5,375 for an average student budget. But there is one catch to the low figure Oakwood claims. Being a minority college, they are heavily subsidized by conference and governmental agencies. This allows them to have an artificial low.

So who stands cost in line? You guessed it—SC! Southern 1984-1985 estimated student budget was $6,980. The school next up the ladder is Walla Walla College’s staggering $7,192 for a school year.

You might argue that $6,980 is still a high price compared to overall costs at a public university. That is true. But a private institution does not have the monetary advantages that a public university has. Nor does a university have the Christian education that our private schools offer.

So when you come down to the bottom line, even amidst rising costs and inflation, SC is still cheap. Not cheap in quality, but cheap in price.

Shh! This Is a Library

I often want to hear those words when I am in the library. Unfortunately, I do not. The noise in that facility is too loud when one considers that a library is supposed to be a quiet place to study. In my experiences with libraries, public or private, the noise level was kept to a minimum, if there was any noise at all. This is not a characteristic of the McKee Library. Last semester while studying on the second floor, all of a sudden, I heard an individual, also on the third floor, yell to someone at the library counter below us. In reply, someone from below yelled back. To my surprise, neither one was told to keep his voice low. Considering the act a rare incident, I eventually forgot about it. However, in subsequent trips, the noise at times seemed to be just as great. I pointed out this fact to the Head Librarian, Mr. Charles Davis, and since then, the situation has improved. The problem does not fall entirely on his shoulders, but the library is still noisy!

There are places in the McKee Library that are very quiet, such as the Reference Room and the Nursing Lab. But why should a student be driven to one of these places if in theory, the whole library is supposed to be quiet. The noise level is particularly high on the second floor in the afternoon. This area is the place where one checks out books, enters and exits, and does his primary research, so understandably, there is a certain amount of noise that should be tolerated. But if one finds that his studying leads him to the library, and he wishes to study at a second floor carpen, then he should not be driven to another area because the last one is quieter.

The logical situation is for the library personnel to emphasize to any individual that talks above a whisper to keep his voice low. The act is not a pleasing one but comes with the job. Because loud talkers are not asked to lower their voices, some students fail to realize that the McKee Library is supposed to be a quiet facility, and not a social area. When this act is done, more students will find the library a logical alternative for studying.

Why Not American History-Black Contribution Week?

Dear Editor,

The letter in response to Mr. Brown III’s article, “Why a Black History Week,” in your February 14 issue. Mr. Brown’s response to the question, “Why have Black History Week and not Chinese History Week or some other ethnic history week?”, does not, in my opinion, answer the question. He says that a group who is treated as he describes, reserves the right to celebrate man’s realization of equality for all. First, if Black History Week is a celebration of equality of all, then why is it titled so narrowly. Why is it not a “Brotherhood Week” (or nonsexual “Peoplehood?”)

Sincerely,

Thomas A. Glander

Is Judging on the Menu

Dr. Lily Wagner

I deposited my luggage at the ticket counter and wandered through the airport. My heart began to turn in the rented ear phone had left me somewhat breathless, but now I had time to waste before my flight left. My body strongly suggested that I do something about that hungry feeling I had ignored for hours. Why don’t they have a decent snack bar in airports? I wondered. I missed having a good restaurant I had known, while my stomach kept telling my mind to DO SOMETHING!

Then as I rounded the corner, my eyes focused on a sign that read Good Earth Food Bar! No further invitation needed! I promptly took the remaining seat at the counter and reached for a menu. Business boomed, helpful personnel dashed around, trying to meet the demands of customers as hungry as I. While I waited I pondered over the menu and scrutinized my seatmates.

Right next to me sat a couple of neatly-dressed, well-behaved, rather solemn young men. Aha! I thought. Missionaries from a well-known active denomination based in Utah I decided wasn’t in any mood to hear a mini-sermon. I quickly turned my attention to the menu and ignored the other customers. Then I noticed that the young man closest to me had just received his order, and it looked exactly like what I wanted to eat! I glanced back at my menu, but couldn’t discover just what that tantalizing item might be. Curiosity and hunger won out. I turned to the young man and asked, “What’s that, and where is it on the menu?”

That led to the beginning of a pleasant conversation. I spoke cautiously, not wanting to be drawn into some religious exchange at that moment. After a while he asked, “Are you on a business trip?”

“Yes,” I replied, “I’m a college English teacher, and I’m out here in Philadelphia for a convention.”

He grinned, then said with a wry smile, “I’ve had my share of them—when I was a student.”

“What do you do now?” No sooner had I said that when I thought, uh-oh, I just gave him the opening he needed. He answered, “I’m a professional hockey player with the Detroit Redwings.”

My astonishment must have showed. He smiled. “Haven’t you ever met a professional hockey player before?”

I hadn’t. Neither did I remember being caught quite so off guard before. An interesting conversation followed. I learned much about professional hockey, broken noses (his slightly crooked nose had been broken four times), and violence in sports. He listened politely to talk of English teaching and Seventh-day Adventist

Our meal ended and we dashed off to catch our flights. I’m not sure what he took away from that encounter, but I learned once again not to be hasty in judging people... “God sees not as man sees, for man looks at the outward appearance, but the Lord looks at the heart.” (1 Sam. 16:7, New American Standard)

Life gives us abundant opportunities for judging others; this is true in the collegiate setting as well. Does that daily routine include some judging perhaps? Faculty see many faces in their classes. Do they give students a chance to prove themselves, or do they make snap judgments just like I did with my friend the hockey player? Students meet faculty whose names have previously been simply names on a roster. Do students also make snap judgments and thereby possibly hinder their own learning as well as a potentially positive relationships with faculty? People meet. People judge. Does it have to be inevitable?

No matter how perceptive we think we are, we DO make mistakes in judgment—particularly in the area of human nature. Let’s give each other a proper chance, and avoid that unnecessary item on life’s menu—Judging!

( Jr. Lily Wagner is the wife of Southern College’s President John Wagner and teaches English at the University of Tennessee/Chattanooga.)

LET ME EXPLAIN

Dear Editors,

Many individuals had trouble understanding the meaning of the "Declaration of Independence" in their day, so it is not surprising that students, administrators, and friends of Southern College have trouble understanding the revision printed in the February 14, 1985, issue of the Southern Accent.

For several years now, the voter turnout for election of Student Association officers has dwindled. Why don’t more students campaign, why don’t more students vote? Could it be that they have had bad experiences with former elections and administrations, or is it that students just don’t feel that their vote will count. Whatever the reason, the revision of the "Declaration of Independence," is meant to be a guideline in future campaigns and administrations.

Honesty should be involved in all future campaigns and administrations. "...the Laws of the Student Association and of the Student Association Constitution entitle them a decent respect to the opinions of the students..."

THANK YOU FOR NO CLASSES

Dear Editors,

The faculty and administration of Southern College deserve a magnificent "Thank You," for not conducting morning classes on Tuesday, the 12th of February because of bad weather, or was it in observation of Lincoln’s Birthday? Whatever the occasion, the decision by Dr. Allen Wagner and their cohorts was very much appreciated!!!

Many students had a great time throwing, failing in and photographing the magnificent blessing. And Southern College was even on the radio, with all the other area school closings. Were there any students wondering what to do? Not to my knowledge.

THANK YOU SC! Clark Larrabee

College Bowl Nears End

Melanie Boyd

The final games of the College Bowl are now upon us. In the past two semifinal rounds we saw, on Thurs., Feb. 14, Duerksen defeating Duncan. Duerksen was off to a running start, with an impressive answering of questions. Then during the middle of play, Duncan launched their comeback to tie Duerksen only momentarily. However, Duerksen couldn’t be stopped and won the game for a final score of 215-230.

On Monday the 18th, we saw the last match of the semifinals. The two teams playing were Hobbs and Goodrum. Hobbs took an early lead in the game, but Goodrum quickly came back to go on top by a large margin. Gradually, Hobbs began to close the gap between them and eventually tied the score. Up until the end of the game, both teams were running virtually neck and neck. Then toward the last few minutes of the game, Goodrum surged ahead to defeat Hobbs 240-210.

Tuesday, February 26, the College Bowl final will be held at chapel, featuring Duerksen versus the winner of the Goodrum/Duncan match.

Denver—Be it a touch of divine intervention or just good business, the Padre Restaurant, run by the Denver area’s largest Catholic parish, is a secular success.

The Disciples are sandwichs, the Prodigal Son a hamburger, and the Pontiff—$11.95 the most expensive menu item—boreless prime rib.

Also on the menu is the Mother Superior club and Adam’s Pride and Eve’s Pleasure—also known as chef and shrimp salads.

The Rev. Fred McCallin was inspired to open the Padre 10 years ago. With the Rocky Mountains as a backdrop, it sits about 20 miles south of downtown Denver, off Interstate 25.

The parish-run restaurant naturally follows the example set by Christ, who “multiplied the loaves and fishes many times” and dined with many of those whose lives he touched, McCallin says.

Housed inside the large, starkly modern brick complex that is the St. Thomas More Center, the Padre has some of the trappings of a chic fern bar, including greyness and stained glass. But there are pews in the lobby for those waiting for a table, and McCallin table-hops in his black-and-white garb.

Despite the priest’s presence and the clever menu, Catholicism is not the main course. The Padre is frequented by business people and families who do not belong to the parish, and rabbis and Protestant ministers also drop in.

That’s the idea, McCallin says.

“The idea is to create a meeting place where people who know nothing about Catholics have an opportunity to meet Catholics, and we have an opportunity to meet them,” says McCallin. “Not that we’re going to go out and evangelize them.”

In fact, there is a mezuzah, a container of prayers placed on the doors of Jewish households, found usually on the Padre door. “Rabbis have come out here and enjoyed the fact that we have one,” McCallin said.

The Padre pays taxes and is run like any other restaurant, says its general manager, Don Mestnik.

McCallin says the restaurant, which offers “good food and generous portions at affordable prices,” usually breaks even.

Anything left over goes into parish coffers.

A drawing of a roly-poly padre decorates the menu, promising “Heavenly Food, Spirits, and More!”

Cashier Nancy Olsen says the menu is a hit with surprised, first-time diners.

“We can’t keep enough menus in hand,” she says, laughing. “They want to take them home for proof.”

Dinners can be topped off with Satan’s Temptations such as mud pie or cheesecake, and coffee is in the “Fire and Brimstone” category.

The Padre has a license to serve Heavenly Hops (beer) and Holy Spirits (the hard stuff), which comes in handy when banquets and wedding receptions are held in the parish complex.

And, of course, there’s wine.

Georgia Butterfield and Pam Cozier enjoy a moment of picture-taking between bites to eat in the Thaisher Hall Rec Room.

If you want a job that’s done right, then don’t get uptight—vote for Brennan and you’ll get service that’s simply OUT OF SIGHT!!!

Try Our “Pontiff”; It’s Delicious

“We serve 48 different beers with the only restriction being a single order per person,” said Mestnik.

The bar, called the Devil’s Den, is open from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. It is open from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday.

The restaurant also offers a variety of steaks, including filet mignon, ribeye, and New York strip. For those who prefer chicken, there is a grilled chicken breast and a chicken Alfredo.

The Padre also offers a variety of salads, including a house salad with mixed greens, a caesar salad, and a Greek salad.

Entrees include a variety of fish dishes, such as a grilled salmon and a shrimp scampi. The Padre also offers a variety of vegetarian options, including a quinoa salad and a vegetable frittata.

The restaurant offers a variety of breads, including a house butter and a whole wheat bread. For dessert, there is a selection of cakes and pastries, including a chocolate cake and a lemon tart.

The Padre also offers a variety of specials, such as a $1.95 burger and a $3.95 prime rib. The restaurant also offers a variety of in-house specials, including a $9.95 weekend special and a $10.95 Tuesday special.

Campus News Digest Service

Applies it's a national problem, especially among teens. Adolescent behavior experts see more and more teenagers with symptoms of depression, apathy and sometimes suicide. Although many parents and teachers may think teenagers are just "going through a stage," the problem is deeper, and depression can have more serious effects. In the past 20 years, teenage suicides have tripled, according to the American Association of Suicidology in Denver. An increasing number of adolescents are being hospitalized for depression. After high school, an increasing number of young people are discovering that they are not ready to handle the responsibilities of adulthood.

Missile Trap in Canada

President Reagan is putting lots of time and money towards finding the "ultimate defense" against incoming missiles. Tuesday morning's news included the story of a remote town in northern Canada. The president was visiting the town to announce the construction of a new missile defense facility. The town is home to many military families, and they were excited about the prospect of new jobs and economic growth. However, the president's plan was met with opposition from the local community, who were concerned about the impact of the facility on their environment and way of life.

Plans for Memorial Auditorium

The April opening of the Trade Center might cut into the business that customarily moves toward the Memorial Auditorium. Manager Clyde Hawkins says that he has plans to make the auditorium business "boom." "We have to have a show," Clyde said, "but it will open up dates we haven't been able to utilize. The live events are the events which bring much more of a revenue than an exhibit show." Hawkins also pointed out that fundraising functions are another way to drum up money to renovate Memorial Auditorium into a fabulous concert hall.
Rees Series Weekend Begins Tonight

J. Randolph Thuesdee

The Rees Series, the highlight of Southern College's basketball season, begins tonight with the first game beginning at 7:00 p.m. As the traditional end to the basketball intramural season, the Rees Series tournament is one not only enjoyed by those who play, but also for those who attend.

The Rees Series was named in honor of Dr. C. N. Rees, President of Southern Missionary College from 1958-1967. Dr. Rees was an avid basketball fan and when he retired, the school held the tournament in honor of him.

The Series began as a Dorm vs. Village tournament based on a best two-out-of-three, but the format soon turned into what has made the Series the classic as it is today, class vs. class.

Tonight's first game features the Juniors vs. the Freshmen. The Juniors, the second seeded team, are comprised of David Butler, Greg Cain, Steve Carlson, Henry Coleman, Mark Murphy, Doug Rowland, Captain, Bob Rodgers, J. Randolph Thuesdee, and Tim Wessman. The Juniors are coached by Reed Christman, who is coaching a Rees Series team for the second time. The Juniors are comprised of David Green, Tony McPadden, Ken Warren, Charley Green, Jeff Davis, Kevin Williams, Rob Williams and Loren Grant.

This promises to be a most exciting time on the campus and students are strongly encouraged to come out and root for their respective classes.

Tonight's victorious teams will play a one game playoff Saturday night after the consolation game between tonight's losing teams. Saturday night's action gets underway at 7:30 p.m.

Article Presents Theory to Extend Periodic Systems

The periodic system of diatomic molecules has been given a firm basis in group theory and has been extended to molecules with larger numbers of atoms. An article just published by Dr. Hefferlin—professor of physics at Southern College who is currently on Sabbatical—by an overseas scientist, and by two Southern College students, explains these results in the Journal of Quantitative Spectroscopy and Radiative Transfer.

The result of the work which this article, and others, report is that small molecules can be arranged in geometric charts just as can the atoms. Thus there is strong evidence of design in the natural world. This design is called the "periodic law;" heretofore, it has been applied to atoms only.

The atomic and molecular arrays display in concrete form "what everyone knows" and they will allow the prediction of numerical values of properties for interesting molecules. Such prediction has already been done for neutral diatomic molecules, and for neutral and ionized quarked molecules. In the former case, there is very good agreement with subsequently found data.

R.A. Hefferlin is currently a visiting professor of physics at the University of Denver. Dr. Hefferlin's colleagues are G.V. Zhukhin, a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Physical and Mathematical Sciences at Leningrad State University; K.E. Caviness (S.C. alumnus), studying for his master's degree in physics at the University of Lowell, in Massachusetts; P.J. Duerksen (S.C. alumnus) working on her doctoral degree in biochemistry at the Medical School of Emory University, in Atlanta.

The work was begun in Leningrad, during the winter and spring of 1941. Dr. Hefferlin was an exchange scholar under a program of the National Academy of Sciences, which administers many such exchanges on behalf of the United States.

The work was completed when the last two authors were undergraduate students at Southern College.

The extension of the familiar chart of the chemical elements so that molecules could be conveniently arranged in rows and columns has taken a long time. Some initial steps were taken by C.H. Douglas Clark, in England, in the ten years before World War II. Allusions to the possibility of accomplishing the extension have appeared in the literature from time to time, and partial tables (for instance, for monoxides of the elements) have been published. Dr. Hefferlin began work on the subject in 1977.

This is the seventh journal article in which the exploration has been documented. Southern College undergraduate students have been co-authors for five of these articles. Giving undergraduates the opportunity to do significant scientific work is a major contribution of the Physics Department, which complements the academic, social, and spiritual aspects of other campus functions.

Dr. Annie Carter Speaks on Personnel Selection for Anderson Series

Human resource consultant Andie J. Carter, Ed.D., R.N., will present a business lecture titled "Interviewing for Personnel Selection" tonight, at 7 p.m. in Brock Hall on the Colliedale campus of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Dr. Carter is currently a consultant for Innovative Human Resources, Inc., and an associate professor in nursing education at Meharry Medical College, Nashville. Last summer she visited a four-year term on the Board of Directors of the American Nurses' Association.

She is the vice president of the Tennessee Association for Gerontology/Caregivers Education. An immediate past president of the Tennessee Nurses' Association, she served on the ANA Commission on Human Rights. Working with the Crisis Call Center, she is a professional back-up and trainer of volunteers.

Dr. Carter received a diploma in nursing from Grady Memorial Hospital School of Nursing in Atlanta, Ga., a bachelor's degree in nursing from Tuskegee Institute in Tuskegee, Ala., a master's degree in nursing from Vanderbilt University School of Nursing, an Ed.S. from Peabody College for teachers, and the National League for Nursing, the Black Nurses Association, the Tennessee Conference on Social Workers, Chi Eta Phi Sorority, Epilson Chapter, and Sigma Theta Tau National Honor Society of Nursing, Iota Chapter.

This presentation is part of the 1985 E.A. Anderson Lecture series, an annual feature of the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College. Made possible by the generosity of E.A. Anderson of Atlanta, Ga., this series was designed to attract top business lecturers to the area and to stimulate a broader understanding of the business world.

The public is invited to attend free of charge. College or continuing education credit is available for a small fee, if desired. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Competition: Good or Bad? Letters...

Nearly a month has gone by since the College Bowl season ended. It ended with a champion who competed in a field of twelve teams to reach that goal. When the team captains were forming these groups, certain ones talked of individuals that had refused to play because he/she felt that competition is wrong. But is it? Each individual is entitled to his opinion. If he believes that competition is wrong, then he should not compete. The reasons that have been given are the following: it glorifies one person over another, it easily leads to tempers flaring, it leads to an unhealthy amount of time being devoted to attaining a goal. All of these problems are true of competition in general, but that should be qualified. Competition isn’t bad or wrong for a person; the love of competition is.

When a person loves to compete, one finds that he is putting an excessive amount of time in doing just that. Of course, in a capitalistic society, a person cannot help but compete against his fellow neighbor. However, the “obsessed” individual goes beyond what competition cannot be avoided. What may be said is that this person loves or dislikes himself so much that the competition is a way of stroking himself. Whether competition leads to glorifying himself or the love himself leads to competing, the truth is that the subject or object of that sentence should be “the love of competition”.

My experience with competition has led me to believe that it can be healthy for an individual. It has taught me to strive harder not for the purpose of glorifying myself, but for the purpose of doing a job that I and others can appreciate. It has generated friendships that I may not have made in another context. And it has given me self-esteem. I am not an exception; others have experienced the same.

To say that when an individual is playing some sport that he is committing a wrong act is to have a limited view of competition (and of sports). Often friendships have been strengthened because of the interaction on a ball field. A parallel may be found in the world of technology. The better car, the better computer, the better household appliance has been made because of competition. Of course, there are other motives for making the better “anything,” but man still is the one who profits (not necessarily economically in this case).

Competition is healthy. The love of competition isn’t.

Dear Editor:

In response to the front page headline in last week’s Southern Accent, “S.C.-Cheap,”

I am cheap:
If your father is an Arab Sheik or your mother is a brain surgeon or if you are between trips to the Riviera or if you need the tuition expense as a tax write off or
If you have “family connections” in Columbia or
If your name ends in “one” or more of the following: Rockefeller, Fococa, Hughes or If you know a “back door” into the computer program in the financial aid office or
If the sticker price on your car equals the sum total of the cars in one or more of the faculty parking lots or if you live in the student park, eat burgers and roots, and ride trash cans for books, pencils, and paper.

A BRUISED PEACH

Dear Editor:

When I first read “How to be a Pastor’s Peach” by Reinhold Smith (Feb. 21), I admit it was amusing. I even laughed out loud at the bit about the screwdriver. But I read it again and began to feel a certain uneasiness with the subtle underlying ridicules this article presented. At the very first, I find Smith’s article an affront to women in particular, and more specifically, to wives, girlfriends, and fiancés of religion or theology majors. For Smith to assume that today’s only satisfaction comes from the legalistic ritual of adhering to archaic (and stupid) stereo-types is really quite immature; it’s obvious he knows nothing about women, a precious little more about nationalism, except for maybe a yellow variety.

Smith apparently has no time for theology majors either. His illustration here is that one would prefer the violence fanatic fabricated by his author. I find major discrepancies between this and the theology students who go to be the spiritual leaders of the church (and if you ridicule future leaders of the church plus their mates, then ask you in turn ridiculing all church?).

I find no reason for such an article to appear in a Sunday Adventist College newspaper, except to mock some thoughtless individuals who doesn’t understand the people are people with hearts and feelings, no matter what their major is—religion, computer science, business, or...

"Don't be anxious and don't worry. Don't look around at what others have gotten or who else have them. Don't look at the things and relationships you think you want. Just keep looking up to Me, or you'll miss what I have to show you. And then, when you are ready, I will surprise you with a love far more wonderful than you would ever dream. You see, until you are ready, and until the one I have for you is ready, (I'm working right this minute to have you both ready at the same time), and until you are both satisfied exclusively with Me and the life I've prepared for you, you won't be able to experience the love that exemplifies your relationship with Me--perfect love. "And, My dear one, I want you to have this most wonderful love. You want to see in the flesh a picture of your relationship with Me, and enjoy materially and sincerely the everlasting union of beauty and perfection and love that I offer you Myself. I love you utterly. I AM God Almighty; believe and be satisfied."

A new addition to the Southern College Nursing staff this year is Sharon Redman, a native of Virginia and a graduate of Columbia Union College. Recently she has been working on her master's degree in Public Health with the Loma Linda off-campus program. Redman now teaches Advanced Practitioner Practice for the Division.

Before coming to SC, Redman was the Director of Quality Assurance and Home Health at Takoma Hospital in Greenville, Tennessee, for eight years. This is her third time teaching for Southern College, although she taught nursing on the Madison campus.

Redman's favorite hobby is traveling. She and her son, Kevin, who is in the 5th grade, enjoy jumping in the car and going somewhere. Redman has been to all of the states in the United States plus Canada and Mexico. As a result of this traveling, she developed a love for photography, to help remember her expeditions. The Southern Accent would like to welcome Redman to Southern College.

SC Students Accepted to Loma Linda

Any student who has taken any upper division biology or chemistry course knows about the competition among Pre-Med majors. The good news for one of these latter students is when he or she receives an acceptance letter from a medical school. Recently, Loma Linda University's School of Medicine gave a partial list of accepted students. Six students from Southern College were on the list: Susan Ermer, Marcella McLarty, Lisa Ohman, Cheryl Reinhardt, Reginald Rice, and Sandra Snider.

In a letter addressed to Dr. Bill Allen, Southern College's Academic Dean, Dr. Rene Evarid, Loma Linda's Associate Dean for Admissions, noted that his school's selection is not over yet and that other students should be accepted subsequently. Congratulations to Susan, Marcella, Lisa, Cheryl and Reginald.

The Christian and Relationships

An Interview with Alberta Mazat

Lori Selby

Last week, Dr. Alberta Mazat spoke on relationships for Southern College's Week of Spiritual Emphasis. Every evening she stressed the importance of establishing strong relationships with men and female friends and husbands and wives, Dr. Mazat also gave advice on how to strengthen these relationships.

In an interview with the Southern Accent, Dr. Mazat restated these points while allowing us to know more about her.

Accent: What is your title or role?

Mazat: I am a professor of Marriage and Family Therapy in the Department of Social Relations at Loma Linda University.

Accent: When did you get into counseling?

Mazat: I decided to go back to school after our youngest daughter started grade one. I had been a nurse before, so I wanted something that used the ability to interact with people. I got a Bachelor's degree in Sociology and a master's degree with emphasis on Marriage and Family Counseling.

Accent: How do you like it?

Mazat: I love it! I love teaching; I'm inspired and stretched in my teaching experience. I also like counseling and group therapy. I don't have a large practice, but all the teachers have an ongoing private practice, so they will be in the process of actually doing what they are teaching.

Accent: What about your family and other outside interests?

Mazat: My husband is an anesthesiologist who works for the university. We have four children. We love to travel, we sing for several organizations, and we walk every day. I love to read.

Accent: Many practices seem to be more acceptable today than they used to be. Does the Christian lifestyle change as society changes?

Mazat: I think the lifestyles change. I don't think God's principles for our life change. I used to be that all men wore beards. When they took them off, it grew bad to wear a beard. Now it's back to being O.K. Styles change, but God's principles, moral values, never change.

Accent: How has the sexual revolution affected Christian lifestyles?

Mazat: Societal changes seem to affect Christian groups, too. You can find Christian groups who will accept premarital experimentation and even some open marriage type things for people who are married. But to me no sex before marriage is a moral standard. There's safety within the boundaries. God has given us for sexual expression.

Accent: How has divorce affected families in the Adventist church? Why?

Mazat: We have a lower level of commitment to marriage. Our expectations of marriage are much higher than they used to be. We expect marriage to fulfill all our physical, social, and emotional needs, and if it doesn't, we give it up too easily. Divorce isn't less traumatic, but it is less frowned upon. Instead of working on the one they've got, people in this expendable society give up on the first marriage and try again.

Unfortunately, the failure rate for second marriages is even worse than for first marriages. That should tell us something. I have a lot of optimism when people recognize that marriages have to be worked on, that they don't come naturally. It's cultivating—helping a grow because anything that isn't growing will be going backwards. Helping marriage to grow should be a pleasure, but there must be effort, investment, and involvement. That's all necessary.

Accent: What steps can young people take to avoid having a marriage that ends up as an unfortunate statistic?

Mazat: Marriages never last suddenly fall apart. They disintegrate over time, beginning with just not working on the marriage, dwelling on the negatives, considering divorce as an alternative, and finally going ahead and doing it. I think that keeping your own personal relationship with God is of prime importance, also time spent sharing devotions with one another. And on the social side—spending time together, keeping their sexual relationship vital, taking advantage of good church programs for marriage enrichment. Being very much aware that a marriage doesn't last without constant stoking of the fires—demonstrations of love and affection, treats, poems, notes, all kinds of things. I think I can almost guarantee that a couple who will do these things will keep their marriage together.

Accent: What can you do before you're married to ensure that your marriage will get off to a good start?

Mazat: Every young couple should have 6 to 8 sessions of premarital counseling in which they really explore their feelings in depth. Some areas for discussion: finances, in-laws, work roles, religious exercises, growth experiences, or another, settling conflicts. They should observe their own families for things to include in their relationship and things to avoid. They should identify their strong and weak points and talk, talk, talk.

Mazat: I've always really encouraged when I meet young people because I sense a desire on their parts to do the right thing. Maybe they're trying to show the generations in that there's a better way of doing things, since we have always left a good record demonstrating those things to them.

Scuba Class Nears End

Brent Van Arsdale

Twenty-three Southern College scuba students plus instructors and helpers headed to Florida last Thursday night for the scuba class checkout dive. The trip completed the final requirement for X.Y.Z. C.A. scuba certification. After driving all night and stopping at Camp Kulaqua, the students were diving in Troy Springs by 10:30 a.m. Friday. In the afternoon, the class went to Manatee Springs. Sabbath was spent relaxing at Camp Kulaqua.

Sunday, the diving was done in the cave-like environment of Ginnie Springs, which gave some students the opportunity to try walking on the ceiling and other stunts.

The overall reaction to the trip seemed to be very positive. Alice Rosyke, senior biology major said, "Ginnie Springs was the most exciting because of the underwater caves."

Mark Schleifer liked Ginnie Springs where he did acrobatics in the cave. He said, "It doesn't matter your skill on land; you are a pro in the water! Triple somersaults, backflips, and cork screws are effortless." Maria Vitovitch really enjoyed the trip, saying, "I wish I were a mermaid."

The vans arrived back at S.C. about 11 p.m. Sunday night.

Southern College Nursing Lecture
Features Expert on Pain Management

Margo McCaffery, R.N., M.S., F.A.A.N., will conduct a nursing workshop on pain, Thursday, March 21, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in Thatcher Hall Chapel on the campus of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists in Collegedale. The clinical nurse manager for pain management at Cen- ticial Hospital Medical Center in Ingwood, Calif., McCaffery, will focus the workshop on basic techniques that can be used to efficiently assess and help the patient with pain. Previously an assistant pro- fessor in pediatric nursing at the University of California at Los Angeles, in addition to her other employment she leads workshops, lectures, and consults on the nursing care of pa- tients with pain.

McCaffery received a bachelor’s degree in nursing from Baylor University in Waco, Texas, and a master’s of science in nursing from Vander- bilt University in Nashville, Tenn. McCaffery has authored six books, including Nursing the Patient in Pain by Harper & Row, Pain: A Nursing Ap- proach to Assessment and Analysis by Appleton-Century, Crofts, and Nursing Manage- ment of the Patient with Pain by Lippincott.

This workshop is part of the annual Florence Oliver Ander- son Nursing Series, dedicated to excellence in nursing. Those wishing to register should call the Division of Nursing at 615-238-2940 by Monday, March 18. The fee of $15 in- cludes handsouts, CEU certi- fication, and a buffet luncheon.

Grad Students Borrow Money at ‘Alarming Rate’
Graduate student indebtedness has risen in every category in the last three years says the Graduate and Professional School Financial Aid Service.

Fourth-year and student credit students had the lowest median debt, but the largest percentage increase, up 46 percent from $5,460 to nearly $8,000.

‘Star Wars’ Goes to College
Five universities will share $19 million over the next four years to develop power sources for President Reagan’s proposed outer- space defense system.

Auburn, the Polytechnic Institute of New York, State University of New York at Buffalo, Texas Tech and the U. of Texas at Arf- lington will establish a “Space Power Institute” at Auburn to coordi- nate the work of about 50 researchers at the five schools.

Until the contracts are awarded next month, the U.S. Defense Department won’t release the contract details.

Arizona State Student Sues Father for Education Expenses
Claiming “severe mental anguish” 18-year-old Elise Elly wants $250,000 from her father who refuses to honor a 1978 separation agreement to pay her living expenses while she attends college.

When the Elly’s divorced in 1978, Mr. Elly agreed to pay educa- tion expenses and $250 a month child support for Elly, says Brian Kelley, Mr. Elly’s attorney.

But the support payments ended on Elly’s 18th birthday, and Mr. Elly said her request for $1,400 a month in college expenses was too much.

Divorce is Cheap Compared to Out-of-State Tuition
A North Texas State woman plans to save about $1,000 in tuition by her $7 December marriage to and future $50 divorce from a Texas man.

When the woman discovered she was credits short of her planned December graduation, a Texas resident friend suggested they marry to cut her spring tuition bill from $1,500 to $300.

“I didn’t apply for a student loan because I wasn’t planning on being in school another semester,” the woman says. “By the time I found all this out, it was too late to apply.”

The students, who live apart, won’t give their names fearing the university will use them for willfully defrauding the state.

Goodrum Captures College Bowl Championship

Malorie Boyd

The championship round of the College Bowl was played during chapel on Thursday, the 26th of February. The two teams playing against each other were Russell Duerksen and Keith Goodrum.

Duerksen’s team members were Ron Aguilara, Heather Blomctey, and Tim Late.

Goodrum’s team consisted of Rob Clayton, Fred Liebrand, Kevin Rice, and Erin Ston.

Excitement was in the air, not only between the two teams, but in the audience as well. As play got under way, Duerksen took an early com- manding lead. However, Goodrum’s team began a quick, steady comeback. Upon taking the lead, Goodrum slowly increased it to a 200-85 point spread. Duerksen frantically tried to bridge that point gap, but each time Duerksen answered a question, Goodrum was able to answer the subsequent one. The final score was 263-180, Goodrum’s victory.

C.F.H. Henry to Speak for Staley Lecture Series

Russel Duerksen

This year’s edition of the Staley Lecture series will take place in the church on Tuesday, March 26, at 10:30 a.m. (Chapel). The featured speaker for this annual series of lectures by leaders in the Christian World will be Dr. Carl F.H. Henry.

Dr. Henry has participated in many activities that have earned him the reputation as a significant Christian scholar. He has traveled the world as a lecturer and teacher, spending approximately three months a year overseas. He has lectured on numerous college campuses nationwide, including Loma Linda University, and is now serving as lecturer at large for World Vision International.

Dr. Henry’s lecture topic will be “The Beginning and End of Life,” and he will participate in a luncheon style discussion ses- sion, in the cafeteria’s large banquet room at 12:00 following his lecture. Faculty and students are all invited to attend.

His literary credits include 28 books, among which is the six volume God Revelation and Authority, which received a six page review in Time when it was originally published. Finally, he is the founding editor of Christianity Today, editing it from 1956 to 1988, and is cur- rently an editor-at-large.

A fool . . . is a man who never tried an experiment in his life.

Where Did the Midwest Go?

Associated Press

Americans see the Middle West, the mythical heartland of the country from which the nation draws its values, as moving farther west as the East becomes less rural, a survey indicates.

Based upon their location, Americans have different ideas about where the "Midwest" is located, says a study published Sunday. But many seem to agree that the heartland is not where it used to be, the report said.

James R. Shorridge, a professor of geography at the University of Kansas, says a survey of 1,941 college students nationwide indicates the Midwest has now moved to the Great Plains states and left behind traditionally considered as part of the Middle West, such as Illinois and Michigan. The term Middle West evokes images of farms, small towns and friendly people, he says, and as the reality of these images moves farther west, so do people's ideas of where this region is located.

Most Americans now think of the Midwest as the central region of the country that includes Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, South Dakota and Missouri, the report says.

"The vernacular region has shifted westward," Shorridge says. "'Omaha and Lincoln, Neb., lie near the region's heart.'"

People began developing the myth of the Midwest as the true heartland of America around 1880, he said in a telephone interview.

"The East, which had been considered the core of values, was perceived as being full of foreigners who had strange religions and values," he said. "The 'true America' was then thought to be in the rural Midwest of the day, where people worked hard, practiced Jeffersonian democracy and upheld 'traditional' values."

Since the beginning of this century, the Middle West traditionally had been described by social scientists and writers as the 12 states extending from Ohio westward through Kansas and northward to the Canadian border, he reports in the Annals.

How Do You Think People View Us?

Have you ever wondered how certain people view Adventists? Certainly, a large amount of the population in this area is Adventists or ex-Adventists. The following call-in was aired on the popular Bruce Williams Talk-Net Radio program heard nationwide, February 27, 1985.

The publication of this conversation is not intended to support one's theory that our church is disliked. In fact, Seventh-day Adventists have a considerable amount of respect in many circles. We find this one man's opinion, however, interesting.

WILLIAMS: Come in Chattanooga.

VOICE: I want to be a radio sportscaster doing-on-the-spot, live, play-by-play broadcasting of sports events.

WILLIAMS: Why do you have an interest in this? Have you had any experience in this field?

VOICE: No. I just want to do it.

WILLIAMS: Are you into sports?

VOICE: Yes, I play in them.

WILLIAMS: How old are you?

VOICE: Twenty-two.

WILLIAMS: Are you in school?

VOICE: Yes.

WILLIAMS: What year?

VOICE: Freshman.

WILLIAMS: What school?

VOICE: (A mumble—not clear)

WILLIAMS: Where?

VOICE: Southern College.

WILLIAMS: Southern College what?

VOICE: Just Southern College.

WILLIAMS: That's all. Huh? (with a little sarcasm)

VOICE: Yes.

WILLIAMS: What are you taking?

VOICE: Communications. Do you think I ought to get a degree?

WILLIAMS: By all means. You could probably find a hundred sportscasters without a degree, but at your age and in the world today a degree is mandatory. Do they have a radio station?

VOICE: Yes.

WILLIAMS: Then get a job with the radio station doing everything you can and work into the sports announcing and go from there.

VOICE: They don't have any sports on, just classical.

WILLIAMS: Only classical. Hold (with a little disdain) VOICE: Yes.

WILLIAMS: Some faculty! Any radio station ought to have a mix on it—sports, news, some rock and roll, maybe a little classical. You better change schools. Good luck.

I Won't Be a "Snitch!"

College Press Service

A transfer student successfully has challenged—at least for the moment—one of the nation's last honor systems to require students to snitch on campus cheaters.

Princeton inadventerously has admitted Wade Randlett, 20, despite Randlett's refusal to abide by the school's 92-year-old student honor code. Though signing a pledge to uphold the code is required for admission to Princeton, Randlett, who transferred from the University of California at Berkeley, objects to the provision requiring students to report cheaters. "If you had an honor code where there was no clause about turning people in, honor would be much better served," Randlett says. "Then someone can come through here (Princeton) and say "I could have cheated. There was nobody to turn me in,"" he says.

Most universities agree. Many schools that have student honor codes have deleted provisions requiring student to turn in cheaters. "We want to instill a feeling of honor," says Amy Jarmol, academic support director at the College of William and Mary, whose honor code deleted its tariff requirement in the early 1970s.

The University of West Virginia made a similar change. Stanford's honor code requires student only to "take an active part" in stopping cheating. "It makes more sense to give students a range of options," says Stanford judicial affairs officer Sally Cole.

Students could, for example, make disapproving noises in class if they saw cheating," the note. "You can extinguish a lot of behaviors with social pressure. Cheating is one of them."

Cole says a survey found 20 percent of Stanford students say they ignore instances of cheating.

A random sample of schools shows that aside from Princeton, only the U.S. military academies require students to turn in cheaters. Military cadets do not, however, have to sign pledges to abide by the code in order to gain admission.

Princeton officials decline to comment on the content of the school's honor code, saying that students are responsible for it.

Dean Joan Girgis did, however, call the code "the heart of our existence."

Student members of the honor code committee could not be reached for comment.

They discovered Randlett's refusal to sign the pledge only after Randlett himself told them about it.

Princeton administrators decided to admit Randlett anyway because it was their mistake.

But they're making him take all his tests in a room separate from his colleagues, under the watchful eye of a graduate student.

"It's basically punishment," Randlett says. "It's saying "We're not going to do what your actual stand is. We'd like to throw you out but we can't.'"

Safety Awareness Day Kicks Off Today

March 21 has been designated Campus Wide Safety Awareness Day. The Student Health Service is the sponsor of the event and has invited twenty-two state, county, and local agencies, as well as certain auxiliaries, to show their displays on safety awareness. Eleanor March, R.N., related that some of the agencies that will be participating in the event are the American Red Cross, the Tennessee Department of Safety, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Chattanooga Speech and Hearing Center.

Some of the topics of the displays are fire safety, sports and recreational safety, crime protection, and motor vehicle operation safety.

Mrs. Hanson cites three reasons why a safety fair is being put on this year: 1) A poll taken a few years ago showed that safety is the health education topic students are most concerned with. 2) The Health Service has found time this year to arrange the programs because fewer illnesses have occurred on campus. 3) The fair allows healthy students to benefit from the Health Service.

The staff of the Health Service encourages students to take time out and look at some of the displays. The agencies will have their booths set up outside the Health Service, in the Student Center, and in the McKee Library.

Song Of A Frustrated Calculus Student

(Lori Heineman)

Lori Heineman

I can't do my calculus any longer
And yet I'm still afraid to let it go
What started out as friendship has grown older
I only wish I had the strength to let it show

I tell myself that I can't do this forever
I say there is no reason for my fear
But I feel so insecure when we're together
You give my life distraction
You make everything so dear

And even as I wander
I'm keeping you in sight
You're a thorn in my side
On an otherwise pleasant night
And I'm getting further than I ever thought I might

And I can't fight this feeling anymore
I've forgotten why I like this class before
It's time to drop this book onto the floor
And throw away the Solutional Manual forever

Oh, I can't do my calculus anymore
I've forgotten all the math I knew before
And if I have to crawl upon the floor
Go crashing through the Records Office door
Baby, I can't take this calculus anymore!

Duane Houck, Biology Professor Furthers Plant Research

Michael J. Battistone

It had been said that great things often come in small packages, and the faculty of Southern College are demonstrating that this holds true for great ideas and small institutions as well.

For a number of years, Dr. Duane Houck, Professor of Biology, has been conducting studies of the hormones involved in budding plants. Last year, in response to a paper he and former student Loren Reisberg submitted, the Research Corporation presented him with a $2,000 grant to continue his work. The Corporation is a private organization located in New York, which makes awards to smaller colleges that may not be likely to receive grants as would larger institutions.

Since the paper appeared in 1963, "sprouts have been requested by twenty-nine scientists representing universities, agricultural experiment stations, botanical gardens, and other institutions in five states and fourteen countries around the world."

The study focuses on the "life plant," Bryophyllum calycinum, an interesting plant whose leaves, when severed from the stem, will sprout young "plantlets" from the notches of the leaves. Originally thought to be a response to changing levels of the hormone auxin, the budding, Dr. Houck now believes, is mainly due to another group of hormones called cytokinins.

This theory is currently being tested, with most of the actual lab work (including leaf homogenizing, extracting, reimpregnation, flash-evaporation, and bioassay analysis) being done by Dr. Houck's assistant, Jerey Parkhurst, a junior biology major.

Dr. Houck expects that the bulk of the research will be completed fairly soon. And that by the end of the summer the project will be finished. Without the grant, which purchased the flash-evaporation apparatus and provided an assistant's stipend for Jerey, much of the work would have been impossible.

"A plant is like a symphony orchestra, with all the physiological processes working like individual instruments to produce the harmony of life," states Dr. Houck. "What we are trying to do is understand one of these instruments a little better, and regardless of what we have learned, we have really only scratched the surface."

Southern College commends Dr. Houck and the students who have worked with him, as well as other staff members and their assistants who have been involved with various research projects, for their creative thinking, their contributions to science, and for showing us that one doesn't have to be "big" in order to accomplish "big things."

Anderson Series Lecturer Chuck Reaves to Speak on Business Success

Chuck Reaves, founder of XXI Associates in Atlanta, will present "Put Change in Your Pocket," Thursday, March 28, at 8 p.m., in Brock Hall, at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists in Collegedale.

Focus of the lecture will be how to capitalize on the inevitability of change, in order to succeed. The lecturer is a popular motivational speaker, management consultant, and teacher of his copyrighted "Success Process."

His book, The Theory of 21, a result of his years of success in the corporate environment, was published in 1983 and has also been translated into Japanese. His theory contends that 20% of every 21 people are blockers who tend to say something can't be done, shouldn't be done, won't be done, or can be done later. A "twenty-one" is a winner, a positive thinker and doer who triggers progress by being open to ideas and innovation.

Reaves was with AT&T for 15 years. He is a member of the faculty of the American Management Association, a decorated Vietnam veteran, and an active Christian layman.

Reaves' presentation is part of the 1983 E.A. Anderson Lecture Series. The public is invited to attend free of charge. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Division Reorganization Continues

Chairmen Confirmed

Brent Van Arsdale

The chairmen for the reorganized divisions of guidance of David Steele, Southern College have recently been named. Eight of the old divisions have been combined into four new divisions. The division of nursing and the division of religion will remain as they are.

The new division chairmen areas follows. Catherine Knar, will be chairman of the Division of Nursing, and Gordon Hyde will continue as chairman of the Division of Religion. The Division of Humanities will be chaired by Judith Hoge and Letters and the Division of Colvin will be chaired by William Wolkers. The Science chairmen for Adult Studies and Special Programs, Division, formerly the Division of Natural Science and the Division of Mathematical not been confirmed yet.
Letters...

SCALVE IT OR LEAVE IT

Having just read the March 21 article about the Bruce Williams’ call-in, I am moved to write my first letter to the editor in a long time.

First of all, Adventists weren’t even mentioned in the conversation. The VOICE was too cowardly to give the full name of the school, so the only view we have of Adventists is that of VOICE. Williams’ sarcasm was toward the incomplete name and his disdain was toward the one-sided (in his view) radio programming, and secondarily to the responsible faculty.

Now I’m from the old school and I’m not too fond of WSMC’s new programming either. (I also have a hard time saying “SC without slipping an “M” in there!) But it strikes me that maybe Williams’ advice wasn’t so far off in the end. If VOICE doesn’t like what he has here, rather than be ashamed of it and put it down, he should go where they serve him and make room for someone who wants to go to a Seventh-day Adventist school, not “Just Southern College.”

Bera Lalone, ’68

FM90.5 IS MORE THAN CLASSICAL

Dear Editor,

This is for me. I usually enjoy sitting back and reading other people brawl in your Letters. Column. But the “How Do You Think People View Us?” column on page 3 of the March 21 edition was too much! This column portrayed the conversation between a Southern student and Talk-Net Radio’s Bruce Williams.

I heartily agree that we should be aware of how other people view the Seventh-day Adventist. That aspect of the article is very good. I would just like to point out that the student (named “voice” in the column) is not aware of the opportunities surrounding him/her on our campus. Williams, of the network, asked our student interested in becoming a sports caster) if SC had a radio station. Our student replied, “no,” but said “they don’t have any sports on, just classical.”

I admit, when I first came to SC a few years ago that’s about all I knew about FM90.5 WSMC to. The fact is FM90.5 Concerns broadcasts sports three times each weekday! Yes, we are primarily a fine arts station representing the college to the greater Chattanooga community, but in the public interest we do also broadcast news and other informational programs. I might add that our news programs “Morning Edition” and “All Things Considered” are the most popular news programs on radio in this country today.

I would urge this student who called in to the talk show to get involved. He/she might find that his own college radio station trains students in all types of broadcasting at no cost.

There are Two Sides to Becoming a Nurse in the Army.

And they’re both represented by the insignia you wear as a member of the Army Nurse Corps. The caduceus on the left means you’re part of a health care system in which educational and career advancement are the rule, not the exception. The gold bar on the right means you command respect as an Army officer. If you’re earning a BSN, write: Army Nurse Opportunities, P.O. Box 7713, Clifton, NJ 07015.

Behind Closed Doors

...7:00? O.K. I’ll be ready! ‘Bye!

Let’s see... I’ve got a date with Chip Friday night, Saturday morning with P.J., and Saturday night with Glen. Isn’t that great?

Are you despicable?

What?

You know, some morning you’re going to stand at the mirror before you brush your teeth and you’re going to realize that your life is one big deception: that you’ve romanced your weight from one lie to the next, leaving a trail of broken hearts. That your flirting games may’ve ruined someone’s life...
Letters...

— that fellow students at his/her college radio station are achieving excellent experience by delivering newscasts and sporting events each day — and that there are currently two FM90.5 announcers (one at WGOO and another at WDEF) delivering professional newscasts in our area, both of them quite capable of being sportscasters if their interest wax in that area. And they were trained at your very own college radio station, FM90.5 WSMC.

Too many of us overlook the important services our college radio station provides. I know, I also did when I first came to SC. No, you can’t be entertained by Michael Jackson, Petra, or Cindi Lauper on FM90.5, but aren’t we all on this campus to learn and be inspired? I think Talk-Net’s Bruce Williams, on this occasion, was quite adept at giving advice without having good information about the college and the radio station. Finally, I should add that I am also very glad I came to SC when seeking a degree in communications. Yes, there are better schools of journalism. But I found SC more than capable of successfully sending me on the road to a broadcasting career, along with helping me get my priorities in life straightened out. To use a sports euphemism, “the ball is in your court!”

Sincerely,

CONTENT OF PHONE CALL

CORRECTED
Dear Editor:
I appreciate the approach in the news item on “How Do You Think People View Us?” on page 7 of the March 21 Southern Accent. However, the interview with Bruce Williams, the national talk host in no way identifies Seventy-day Adventist with Southern College of Seventy-day Adventists or Bruce Williams had no evidence to connect Southern College as identified in the conversation with our church. If the caller had felt at ease giving the entire name of the church then probably the conversations would have taken a different turn and then Southern College of Seventy-day Adventists would have been publicized nationwide to a very large audience.

I heard this broadcast and the reaction to the abbreviated name and radio station were strictly off-the-cuff and based on the information at hand. I did feel that he assumed that the radio station was under the direction of the communication faculty.

Your heading was correct, but the “Us” should have referred to Southern College of Seventy-day Adventist and not the Seventy-day Adventist Church as used in the lead paragraph introducing the actual interview.

Personally, I want to thank you for the good job and the improvement in content that you and your staff have accomplished this year.

Cordially,
Noble B. Vining

The GREAT COMMUNICATION of RADIO

Dear Editor:
Because I work at the radio station (FM90.5 WSMC) mentioned in your article, “How Do You Think People View Us?”, in the March 21 Southern Accent (page 7), I am especially motivated to share with you a few disappointments.

First of all, as a classical music lover, I am always disappointed when someone speaks of classical music “with a little” disdain, as you described Bruce Williams’ voice in your transcription of a conversation with an SC student. I imagine my disappointment when someone tells me they don’t like music (or like a similar to a sports lover’s disappointment when I say I dislike football.

More importantly, I was disappointed to read Bruce Williams’ untrue statement that “Any radio station doesn’t have a mix on it...” I doubt that Williams actually believes what he says (he would actually suggest that WGOO or US101 or KZ106 should play “...little classical!”)

The “Great Communication” of radio is NARRATING: picking out an audience you hope to reach and then playing exclusively what that audience wants to hear. One reason FM90.5 doesn’t broadcast much sports (we do about 20 minutes a day) is because, generally speaking, classical music lovers (our main audience) don’t have a tremendous interest in sports; similarly, KZ106 doesn’t play much classical music because they know their listeners, generally speaking, have little interest in Bach and Beethoven.

Most important, I was disappointed that your article did not deliver what the first paragraph claimed it would: one man’s opinion of Seventy-day Adventists. According to the transcription of the conversation, the name SEVENTY-DAY ADVENTIST never came up. By his comments, it appears that Bruce Williams has no idea that Southern College is a Seventy-day Adventist school.

Your article did not give us Bruce Williams’ opinion of our church; only his opinions of classical music and radio station formatting (both questionable), Editor, I believe you can do better; now show us...

Sincerely,
Sam McBride
Program Dir., FM90.5 WSMC

The Southern Accent stands corrected on the use of the headline mentioned in the above four letters. However, no misreading was intended. The editorial staff did not hear Bruce Williams’ broadcast. The individual “who” is a respected member of the college staff. Upon receiving the article, we were under the impression that Mr. Williams had heard of Southern College of Seventy-day Adventists, thus the reason for our use of the denomination’s name in the article.

WHAT’S WRONG WITH SATIRE?

Dear Editor,

The two published condemnations of Reinhold Smith’s “How to Have a Pastoral Peace” in last week’s Accent proved to me that there are some people who are uninterested in the journalistic process called “editing.” It is understandable that these few would actually be offended by such an article, but let’s enhance the proof of their problem, shall we?

Webster and not, the small fry that comes over the airwaves on ABC’s Friday night prime time series defines satire as “a literary work in which irony, derision, or wit in any form is used to expose folly or wickedness.” Now, Pastor peach’s aren’t “wicked,” but clearly the article should not have been taken seriously. Therefore, Mr. Gentry and Mr. Gardner took a second look at what should’ve only been looked at once and laughed at accordingly. Do these people watch The Tonight Show with the same scrutiny?

Secondly, for Ms. Gentry to accuse that Smith’s article was demeaning to woman is lost in her attempt to analyze the satire. Also, for her to think that satire has no place in an Adventist school newspaper is pretty narrow-minded.

Mr. Glander acknowledged that this is a Christian environment. What a discovery. I don’t know very much about being a Christian from personal experience, but if it means not being able to laugh at situations or humorous writings, it has to be saying “no” to a very human impulse.

Mr. Glander also says that here we should accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative.” The government of the Soviet Union does this on a daily basis. Maybe he ought to apply for a job in the Politburo when he’s done. (That was a joke, Tommy.)

However, the two letters condemning Smith’s article had one good note. They proved that he wrote was indeed funny, and that was its sole purpose. Say it with me now— satire.

Sincerely,
J. Randolph Thuesedt

Talent Show Highlights Local Performers

Korman Hobbs
Where were you Saturday night? Well, if you were not at the Student Association Talent Show, you missed a good program. The entertainment included something for everyone. To begin with, the minuet men escorted Andre Salco and Russell Atkins, taught everyone how to clap for an act and how to give a standing ovation. Throughout the program, they brought laughter with their jokes while awaiting the next act. Sometimes the laughter was directed at them for a “corny” joke.

The great amount of talent made it tough for the judges: Brenda Carnahan, Dan Chesla, Ben McGuffin, Glenn McElroy, and Bill Wolke. After the program was over, the results were announced. There were two categories: miscellaneous and popular.

In the miscellaneous category, third place was given to Brad Senska, Russell Atkins, and Jeff St. Clair for “It had to be you/Pecos Bill.” The second place winners were the Smokey Brothers. For this act, the winners were Danny Golightly and Paul Ware in “Mom Always Liked You Best,” an act from the Smokey Brothers repertoire. The first place award went to John Brill in “Real Entertainment.” John showed great juggling ability while handling balls, pins, handkerchiefs, and rings. At one point, he juggled a bowling ball, a tennis ball, and a ping pong ball. His last juggling act had him juggling pins that were set afire.

In the popular category, Ester Pascamanal and Burke Crump received third place for “With You I’m Born Again.” The second place winner was Tag Garnson’s “Romantic Medley.” The first place prize went to the performers of “This Time”: Michelle Cromwell, Kim Deardorff, and Bob Jimenez.

The audience had their own vote for the overall winner. The people’s choice was “This Time,” composed by Kim Deardorff only a week before the show. Besides thanking those involved in the performance, Kim commented on the encouragement this award gives him. An award of this sort makes him see the importance of “keeping at it.” In talking with Kim, I discovered that he wants to be a professional song writer.

Missie YapShing and Bob Folkenberg, Co-Vice-Presidents for Social Activities, worked hard to plan the program. Missie thought that everything went great and thanks everyone who participated from the bottom of her heart.

Talent Show 1985 is over; however, 1986 is on the way.

Dr. Gerald Bennett to Lecture for Nursing Series

Gerald Bennett, Ph.D., will present “The Impaired Nurse,” Thursday, March 28, from 11:05 to 11:45 a.m. in Thatcher Hall at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists in Collegedale.

The focus of the lecture, part of the Florence Oliver Anderson Nursing Series, will be how to cope with alcohol and drug abuse by the professional nurse and how to use community resources to deal with the problem.

Dr. Bennett is an associate professor and chairman of mental health- psychiatric nursing for the Medical College of Georgia School of Nursing in Augusta. He has written extensively on the subject of substance abuse.

He received his bachelor’s degree in nursing from Medical College of Georgia in Augusta, his master’s degree from Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio, and his doctorate in psychiatric-mental health from the University of Texas.

Dr. Bennett belongs to the Drug and Alcohol Nursing Association and is a board member of the Mental Health Association of Augusta.

The Florence Oliver Anderson Series is an annual feature of the Division of Nursing at Southern College. All-but especially nursing professionals—are invited to attend this lecture free of charge.

Associated Press
NEW YORK (AP)—Would you file a deliberately honest tax return if it meant that you were eligible for a million-dollar prize?

Such a lottery was one proposal offered by a group of social scientists to the Internal Revenue Service asked to consider ways the agency could deal with cheating, according to an article in the April issue of Psychology Today.

Some of the suggestions “have legal and practical obstacles, but all are based explicitly or implicitly on well-established psychological theory,” said Elizabeth F. Loftus, a professor of psychology at the University of Washington at Seattle.

The lottery was one proposal, but “more realistically,” the IRS could offer positive reinforcement by giving those who filed accurate returns a tax rebate or by lessening their chances of future audits, said Ms. Loftus, one of the people the IRS called together for a three-day seminar in January.

“Such schemes might at least encourage people to check their returns carefully and avoid the necessity of contacting millions of taxpayers who misstated figures or mistread tax tables,” she said.

A survey, commissioned by the IRS and conducted by Yankelovich, Skelly and White Inc., indicates that tax cheating is a major problem. Of more than 2,000 people polled in interviews last year, 20 percent said they cheated. But those surveyed estimated that 41 percent of all taxpayers cheated.

Thirty-eight percent agreed that, “Since a lot of rich people pay no taxes at all, if someone like me underpays a little, it’s not a big deal.”

... if someone like me underpays a little it’s not a big deal.

The survey did not indicate a margin of error.

The main reasons people cheat: “The tax system is unfair,” “They can get away with it,” “Everyone else does it,” “To beat the system or win out,” and “Don’t like or can’t control how their money is spent.”

To deal with that last complaint, the scientists proposed that the IRS adopt a “check-off” system that would allow taxpayers to designate a certain percentage of their taxes for a specific use, such as education or defense.

This would not necessarily change the way money is spent, the scientists said, noting that the amounts that could be designated would be limited.

“...but the checkoff scheme could make taxpayers feel better about paying their taxes by giving them some say about where their money is spent and by encouraging the feeling that their money makes a difference,” Ms. Loftus said.

Other proposals included an advertising campaign in which celebrities proclaim the joys of paying taxes, and an increase in the amounts that are withheld. Taxpayers who are scheduled to receive refunds are less likely to cheat than those who expect to owe money, she said.

Patient Dies of Air Freshener Mixup

A patient at Vanderbilt Hospital died March 13 when he was given a lethal dose of air freshener mixed with his juice. Both the air freshener and medication were green liquid and were contained in clear bottles. The patient, Fred Rusk, was in the hospital for outpatient cataract surgery. Procedures from the hospital's Department of Nursing on administration of medication say the label on the bottle is always read three times...before removing from the shelf and again before pouring or preparing.

Thursday Execution Delayed

U.S. District Judge John T. Nixon, on Monday, delayed indefinitely the Thursday execution of William Grosecloe, pending a ruling in a lawsuit over conditions in Death Row. Groseclose was convicted in 1978 of hiring three men to murder his wife. A hearing on the motion began last Friday, and Nixon issued his order at its conclusion on Monday. Groseclose is housed in maximum security Unit VI of the Tennessee State Prison in Nashville.

Hospital Revenue Not Meeting Cost

Erlanger Medical Center executives say they can’t keep relying on interest from hospital investments to shore up slim profits from operating the hospital. Profits this year won’t meet the goal and didn’t the three previous years. Financial statements show income from operations in 1985 is expected to be $1.9 million, 1.6 percent of $117 million in net revenue.

GARFIELD®
As the NCAA tournament concludes this weekend, playoff fever becomes alive and well in both the NBA and the NHL. Surely it seems, though, the key word in each playoff—NCAA, NBA, and NHL—is "repeat." The Georgetown Hoyas, Boston Celtics, and Edmonton Oilers each have a good chance at attaining this goal in each of their respective leagues.

Most college basketball fans believe that the Hoyas will repeat, even though they first must get through St. John's this Saturday. Many of the fans also know the factors that make Georgetown an awesome team and what they have to do to win their second NCAA tournament in as many years. So let's not go into that stuff anymore. Let's talk about the real playoffs that are upon us.

First, the NBA. The Boston Celtics—owners of 1) the league's best record; 2) the league's best coaching, game in and game out; 3) a tradition of winning teams, and lest we forget; 4) Larry Bird—seem to be a sho-in to be the first team in the NBA to have back-to-back championships since the conception of Detant...right? Don't be so sure. Although teams such as Atlanta, Seattle, and Chicago certainly won't take the title away from the Celtics, there are some that are waiting in the wings to detract the defending champs. Teams like Milwaukee, whom the Celtics only have beaten once this year; Los Angeles, who, among other things, wants revenge for last year's championship loss; Philadelphia, who would love to ruin Boston's repeat party strictly for the sake of the rivalry; and Denver—even though they still don't know how to play defense. Yet, the Nuggets would like to get Dan Issel an NBA championship ring as a retirement gift.

Switching to the NHL, Wayne Gretzky's Edmonton Oilers are looking to build their own dynasty in much the same fashion of the New York Islanders of late '79 and the early '80's. Though it seems as though no one can stop the Oilers when Gretzky, Paul Coffey, and Jari Kurri are on their game, the Philadelphia Flyers, and Washington Capitals are the only serious contenders for the Cup this year. Yes, that meant that the Islanders are has-beens. Montreal and Buffalo are good teams, themselves, but they wouldn't need to have an extraordinary drive for the Cup to defeat Edmonton. Other teams like St. Louis, Chicago, and Winnipeg simply don't have the defense to stop a club that scores at will like the Oilers. Chalk another one up for loud-mouth coach Glen Skelton.

It's highly likely that all three teams (Boston Celtics, Edmonton Oilers, and Georgetown Hoyas) will accomplish the goal that they set out for at the beginning of their respective seasons. However, you can be sure that they'll get a serious run for their money. Whatever happens, the run for the championship in each league will be interesting.

MONEY

South 8 Hubbard 1

Eric Ficeli scored four goals in leading South to an easy victory over winless Hubbard. Hubbard, who has been of little concern to the other teams in the league, was even in this one. Ted Chase made it close in the first period with Hubbard's only goal.

Boyle 5 Negron 5

Boyle took a 3-2 lead into the third period only to be outgunned by the scrappy Negron offense in the final period. In the third period, Negron's offense, led by Joe Chaffin (2 goals) and Bob Rodgers (1 goal) scored 3 goals to come from behind. Chaffin had three goals for the game as did Dave Allison of Boyle's team. With 45 seconds remaining in the game with the score tied at 5, Bob Rodgers went to the penalty box for slashing giving Boyle a power play that was eventually unsuccessful.

Estrella 6 Durocher 4

Jim Estrella and Jerry Russell scored two goals apiece but it was Jon Miller who got the game winner in this close contest. Miller's goal midway in the third period put Estrella ahead to stay. A few minutes later Brian Nase added an insurance goal for the winners. Bob Durocher and Bobby Kendall had two goals apiece for the losers.

TUESDAY

Lucas 8 Boyle 5

Lucas continued its roll as six goals were led by Doug Copass and Brian Pollitt who had three goals apiece. Boyle put up a good fight getting two goals from Stephen Pollitt.

Mellert 9 Hubbard 0

Vito Montecorpo posted his first shutout of the season against a very much Hubbard team. Montecorpo's toughest save came on a shot by the captain of his team Bob Mellert. "I was surprised as he was," says Vito. "I wasn't sure what he was doing. It looked like he would shoot on me, though he didn't." It was a great save by the otherwise overlooked Montecorpo. Rob Mellert led all scorers with five goals while John Montello got three, thus finishing Hubbard's season winless at 0-4.

Jacks 7 South 5

At 1600 of the third period Mike Fulbright took a pass from Steve Jacks and scored the winning goal as Jacks chased South. Fulbright scored a hat trick while Jacks and Dave Fussner added two apiece to round out the scoring. The second period was full of hot temped scoring as five goals were scored, with South getting three. While the second period was mainly an outlet for pent up emotions, the third period was classic defensive hockey. Greg Hess and Joe Joiner made numerous spectacular saves while South got great defensive play out of Norman Kuda. Jim South led his team with three goals.

How To Be a Shenandoah Man

Renehold Smith

(The following article is satire and should not be taken seriously.)

Remember at the beginning of the school year, when you would sit in the cafeteria or a classroom and think to yourself, "I wonder where that guy or girl went to academy?"

The following is the first of a one-part series on what it takes to be a "Shenandoah Man."

2. Must be short in height also, five-eight or less.
3. Looking 14 is most desirable, but not over 17. (Five extra points)
4. Hang around together every hour of the day.
5. If you ask a girl out on a date, be sure to bring along the same.
6. Buy the latest fashions, spend a fortune on them, bring them back to your dorm room, throw them on the floor or under the bed, and wake up the next day and wear them, wrinkled of course.
7. Get a nickname like Skip or Tippy, or perhaps the "Spuds."
8. Wear your academy letterman jacket all the time.
9. Sit in the cafeteria with other Shenandoah alums and be perfectly obnoxious.
10. Wear tennis shoes and 501s everywhere, even to vespers.

If you have, say... eight to ten of the preceding criteria down to a way of life, you must be a Shenandoah grad. If not, perhaps you could go back to academy next fall. Plan now to enroll because, like yourself, many other "men" obviously went to the wrong academy first time through.

Europe on $5.00 a Day and a Prayer

By John Dinsinger and Bob Folkenberg

Because of the number of students who will be traveling to Europe this summer, and the increasing interest in the European Study Tour, Accent felt that this would be of interest to a number of readers.

It has been said that necessity is the mother of invention, and after traveling for a month in Europe on a bare-bones budget we would have to agree. When you have a budget of $5 a day, you are on the necessity level with some pretty inventive ways to squeeze the most out of every penny! This, however, does not need to take away from the excitement of a European vacation.

In fact, we found that it added a sense of adventure to this excitement (as in: where are we going to eat?). After a month of this constant adventure, we decided that our new-found knowledge could be very valuable assistance to other budget-conscious travelers like ourselves. So the idea of Europe On $5 A Day...

...And A Prayer was born. (Please don't pass over the prayer part lightly, it is a very important ingredient of this type of travel.)

Let us state at the beginning that this is not your ordinary tourist guidebook. This is a handbook for survival and nothing more (If you do anything more, you go over)

The deadline for entering the Southern College writing contest is drawing near. April 5 is the final date to turn in those masterpieces you worked so hard on. There are two categories that will be judged: library research papers and critical-analytical papers (which can include a wide variety of writings). There will be three prizes in each category carrying cash values of $75-$50-$25. Winners honored at Awards Chapel.

Geology Professor Visits S.C. Mike Rasmussen will be presenting a seminar on "The Geology of the Appalachian Mountains of Pennsylvania" on Thursday, March 28 at 12:00 noon in the east end of the cafeteria. Mr. Rasmussen teaches in the geology dept. of Loma Linda University, LaSierra Campus. Any students who may be interested in graduate studies in geology may set up an appointment through the counseling office.

The Japan Center of Tennessee will sponsor a Kabuki Dance-Lecture performance by Professor Kimido Gunji of the School of Art and Design at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Japan will be the focus of this program on Wednesday, April 17, 1985 at 7:30 p.m. in the McCoy Theatre.

Faculty, staff and students are invited to a free lecture-demonstration on Color Analysis on Thursday, March 28, 11 a.m. in S.H. 105. The lecture will be followed by a seminar on wardrobe planning, closet organization, hair and face analysis, complete individual color analysis with color swatches, etc., commencing April 2 and April 4 at 7 p.m. Sign up and pay the fee of $45.00 for the seminar series, at the time of the free lecture on Thursday.

PERSONAL

To all those concerned (and to those who aren't): Mark Eglin asked me to inform you that--contrary to popular belief--he is in no way related to the person with the initials M.E. who was mentioned in last week's Southern Accent. He would like to point out that he is from Winter Haven, Florida, not "Winnie Haven." He adds that his neck has finally quit peeling.

Michael Paigrove

The drinking fountain by the tennis courts was a project of your local Student Association jointly financed by SA, city of Collegeville, college administration, and CASL, for the benefit of all. Unfortunately benefit is not obtainable. If you took the handle that makes it go or find it lying around--please put it back. Thanks.

Thank you to the person who returned an envelope to Teresa Barton. Your honesty was greatly appreciated.

Europe...

your $5 budget. Hotels and restaurants are in the same category as watch stores in Switzerland and clothes stores in Rome--to be appreciated from the outside only. As far as souvenirs, tour books, and museum admissions are concerned, don't even concern yourself-they're out of the question. Food and lodging are the only things that you think about on $5 a day. Because we only have two areas to deal with, and because we know that you don't want to carry a thick guidebook all over Europe (and because we both have Acts & Epistles to do) our advice will be short, sweet and to the point.

What to take:

- Basically, as little as possible, but for some specifics:
  - Backpack
  - Sleeping bag (warm)
  - Plastic ground cloth (you don't always know what you're sleeping on)
  - One change of clothes (to wear while others are being aired out)
  - Tent

- Camera and diary
- Essential toiletries
- What not to take: Basically, everything that isn't on the "What to take" list, but for some specifics:
  - Hair dryer
  - Non-essential toiletries (cologne, mascara, conditioner, eye-lash curlers, etc.)
  - Pillow
- Europe on a $20 A Day
- Hotel reference book
- Any memories of Mom's home cooking?

Now that you're packed, we recommend that you get off last good night's sleep and then gorge yourself! When you have done that, you're ready to experience (and endure) Europe on a $5 a Day... and a Prayer.

YOU CAN SAVE YOUR COUNTRY...

AND WIN A $10,000 SCHOLARSHIP!

Federal deficit spending is snuffing your future. Right now the federal government is spending $4 for every $3 it takes in. It doesn't take an economist to figure out that when you spend more than you make, you're in trouble.

And federal deficit spending is getting all of us into trouble. Starting a career is tough enough without having to struggle with a wounded economy. If the deficit continues, you'll have trouble, killing industries and jobs shortages could be the results.

It's important that our decision makers know how you feel about the deficit—to get them to act now. You can tell them how by joining the "You Can Save Your Country" National Essay Contest. We'll make sure that the President and Congress receive a copy of your essay. PLUS, you can win a $10,000 scholarship or one of three $2,500 scholarships.

Contact your Student Government Office for contest details or write to: National Essay Contest, Institute of Financial Education, 111 East Wacker Drive, Chicago, IL 60601.

But hurry! Entries must be received by April 27, 1985.

News has been released from the offices of the Head Deans of Thatcher and Talge Halls that starting in the Fall of the 1985-86 school year new rules for incoming freshmen will go into effect. The policy is an effort to help students make the transition to adult life as smooth as possible. Dean of Men Reed Christian believes that the rules are fair.

"I knew that at first appearance they (the rules) look ridiculous...fair is a better word...but in the past, freshmen have not always had the smoothest of transitions for making their own decisions," says Christian.

Dean of Women Millie Ruyan agrees. "The rules may be tough, but we felt that we had to take the initiative in helping freshmen cope with a new situation."

When countered with the argument that not all of the freshmen need help with making the transition to adult life, Christian said, "Yes, that's true, but those that don't need the help will have to accept the new policy. It's just like Sabbath School check. Not all of the students need to be check- ed on, but the dorms do it because we didn't, and more and more students would stop going to church."

As of now the new policy runs as follows: All freshmen are obligated to obey these regulations as well as those of the college, and any attempt to violate them will be dealt with severely.

The new rules are as follows:
1. Freshmen are required to wear name tags on themselves between the hours of 7:00 am on Mondays and 4:00 pm on Fridays. These shall be worn to all special weekend activities of the college.
2. Freshmen are required to speak to all persons they see on campus with a polite "Hello.
3. All Freshmen shall be courteous at all times to members of the upper class and faculty.
4. All Freshmen must exit and enter the campus by way of Apison Pike only. They are not to use Camp Road or Tallant Road for these purposes.
5. Freshmen shall enter the Administration Building, Wright Hall, and the residence halls, Talge and Thatcher Halls through the front doors only.
6. Freshmen are urged to attend all chapels, Wednesday night services, Vespers, and Sabbath School and Church meetings. Specified seating areas for freshmen will be marked.
7. Freshmen will be required to register on campus any time the following:
   a. Alina mater
   b. The year Southern College was founded
   c. The name of the President of the college
   d. The names of the officers

School of Women and the Student Association.

The new policy was ushered in by the names of the Dean of Men, Dean of Women, Academic Dean and the name of your Academic Advisor.

Freshmen cannot wear any article of clothing or any insignia that pertains to any school other than Southern.

Freshmen shall be clean shaven and have neat collegiate haircuts at all times.

Freshmen shall know the names and locations of all buildings on campus.

If any of these rules are broken, the violator will appear before the newly-formed Student Court of Southern College, upon request of the Court, at a time set for hearing of said violator.

The Tennessee Twang

President John Wagner, for twenty unpaid moving violation tickets; and Mike Pahlgrov, SA Vice-President, for peeping into Thatcher Hall windows after hours.

After a dozen consecutive false alarms, the Collegedale Volunteer Fire Department failed to report to an actual fire on Tallant Road yesterday. Although no one was killed, all of the Anderson's possessions were lost in the blaze. The family is leaning towards suing the city of Collegedale.

Police reported to a call-in at Wright Hall yesterday where women of Thatcher Hall, pro- testing the new rule for Talge Hall residents which allows them to come in at any hour of the evening, began to throw rocks at the windows of the administra- tion building and to strip off their clothes. Lynnette Jones, arrested for indecent exposure, said that if the rule isn't changed, the girls will do it again.

"I do it for fun," says Clower. "What he is referring to is the "act" of severing animals limbs with a chainsaw. Clower has been doing this type of work for nearly 18 years. "When I was just a young boy," Clower reminisces, "I used to lie in the grass and watch my dad cut down trees with a chainsaw. I started daydreaming and found myself thinking how much fun it would be if that tree was, say, a giraffe's neck instead. It wasn't until years later that my dream became a reality."

This somewhat sadistic attraction dates back to the year 500 B.C. when the Romans began chopping off animal heads with axes in their stadiums. Clower, like the Romans, draws large audiences, and many animal activist groups have had Clower fined. "What would you do if you got $100,000 a show and had to pay only $5,000 of that in fines? Well, I plan to keep my show on the road."

In the picture to the right, Clower is shown just minutes before he starts up his chainsaw and runs it through the dog's neck. "I like what I'm doing," says Clower, "and that's what's important."

Clower has already made national appearances at the White House, Queen Elizabeth's court, Phil Donahue and Julia Child's cooking class. He is booked up months in advance, but thanks to the ingenious planning and connections of Dean Schriner he will be coming to Collegedale tonight. "It really ought to perk up attendance for the artist adventure series," states Schriner. "John and I are really looking forward to this."

Tickets are $50 for community, students free with I.D.

Southern College Develops Pop/Rock Band

The Office of Development and Public Relations announced plans today for its most unusual PR gimmick to date. President Wagner has asked several of the secret musicians among the faculty to join with him in forming a pop/rock band called "Johnny and the Recruiters." The band is planning to tour the Southern Union, with stops at all the major academies, to boost the student enrollment.

"It's a sure thing!" exclaimed Vinita Sander, Director of P.R. at Southern. "See, all the good groups have lead singers with gimmicks—Ozzy has his headless bat, Mick has his lip stereoids, and John, well, we've probably got the only rock band in the world where the lead singer is a bass!"

"When Vinita first approached me with the idea, I thought it was too excited," admits Wagner. "But after a few practice sessions, I'm beginning to see the major benefits a program like this can have."

"That's right," agreed keyboards player E.O. Grundset. "And the tour also provides an excellent opportunity for ornithological discoveries."

Not all the members of the group feel so positive about the group's influence. Drummer Francis Andrews admits she joined only under great pressure, and is often heard at rehearsals muttering, "This is really silly." Ed "Boom-Boom" Lamb, the band bass player, is more concerned with the time element involved with touring. "I have a wife to think about, you know!" he said.

Although some members complain, the group still continues to rehearse. Lead guitarist Evelyn Moore and back-up singer Jan Haluska have even written several original songs for the group, including "Everything's Fine in the Cafeteria" and "C'mon, Be a British-Lit Baby." Along with these, the band also plays modified Top 40 hits dealing with everything from studies ("All Night Long") to fineness ("Think of Laurel") to graduation ("Against All Odds").

"I think we have a good thing going," said the band's other guitarist, Cecil Rolfe. "I can't wait to do the album." He added, referring to the group's first album, tentatively titled, "Me and My GSL," due out in early 1986.

When asked whether he thought of himself as a star, Wagner expressed the sentiments with this statement: "This is a serious business venture," he said. "It's not a freak show; we're serious."
Herman Fights Back!

Chap Lin (Socialist Press)

Collegedale, TN: A bizarre chain of events has led the Socialist Press to discover some startling facts about the usually sublime and slow-paced city of Collegedale. Many of this town's influential and thought-to-be peaceful citizens have been indicted on many different counts.

The underground conspiracy all began to come into focus just last week, but not to Jim Herman, who moved to Collegedale a number of years ago to assume the supposed role of college chaplain. To him the conspiracy was what he came to fight. "I knew there was something fishy going on in Collegedale," he says. "Now could a business like the Campus Kitchen serve the food they do and stay afloat without some outside funds being funneled in that direction?"

Herman's inclinations were exactly right. A massive underground has been functioning right out of Collegedale. In fact, many of Southern's teachers are part of the organization along with the present and the former SA presidents. The retribution last year was due in part to ridding teachers not involved in the scandal and making room for "members."

The main purpose of the underground is still unclear, and many of its own members "don't know who we are fighting." It is true that no one person has admitted to knowing anything about the underground (even members), but Jim Herman "knows a bad apple when I see it." There is one person who admitted to having dealings in the underground. We spoke to Jook Ting Shim (alias JT) in his maximum security cell at the Collegedale police department.

"I was to try and take over the Ooltehaw Telephone Company."

"My work was simple," says Shim. "I was to try and take over the Ooltehaw Telephone Company. Perhaps taking Senate there last year for a tour being too bold." Shim says he doesn't regret what he did and openly admitted that he was going to make a break for it as soon as he could. We asked him what he would do if he escaped. "Head for China," was his reply. "I have family there."

Glen McElroy was another member indicted. His dealings in the underground include remodeling the CK. It is supposed that this was his biggest error, for it caused Herman to question where the money for that effort came from.

Perhaps the biggest breakthrough in the effort of Herman to expose the workings of the underground came with the increasing interest in the "endowment fund" to "help students attend college here."

William Taylor (alias Big Billy) says that "Herman it reading things into the picture that aren't even there. We aren't running a scam here." However convincing Taylor's arguments may sound, Herman is positive that Bill is the Director of Finance for the organization.

"I received a letter thanking me for my five dollar contribution."

"Just the other day," says Herman emphatically, "I received a letter thanking me for my $5 dollar contribution from the Senior class. I'm not even a student. They told me they would be crediting my statement." This tipped off Herman that someone was trying to make a buck. William Taylor was the only logical choice.

The pieces of the conspiracy are still trying to be put together. Herman still says, "I'm very confused. These people (the members of the underground) swear that they don't know what I'm talking about and sound so sincere."

But Herman won't let that stop him. He's determined to put the offenders away. As of now, 13 faculty and 28 students have been indicted along with 6 Collegedale residents. More arrests are bound to be made within the next few weeks.

The Socialist Press asks Herman what he would do when he finishes his work here in Collegedale. "I've been thinking about that," says Herman, "and I think from the experience I've learned from this chaplain cover-up, I'll just stay on as the real chaplain."

Cutbacks in Intramural Budget Produces New Sports

Because of the new budget for the upcoming school year, the Coach has announced five new sports. Apparently, the lack of available money has forced the softball field's lighting to be shut down for at least two more school years. Also affected by the new budget are flag-football, floor hockey and co-ed volleyball.

Intramural Basketball and the Rees Series will be limited to the outside courts in the rear parking lot of the gym and will still be held during the months of January and February. The games will be played from side to side with more than one game happening at once.

One of the new sports announced by the Coach is Penthouse Magazine Reading. "During the season, fellas will be given 'back issues' of Penthouse magazines found in Brent Van Andel's room and will be asked to do a full report on what they saw," the Coach said. "This sport will keep the heart beating at a relatively upbeat pace and therefore will strengthen heart muscles a great deal." For the ladies, a magazine has not been chosen as yet and the Coach is open for suggestions.

Challenge Nose Picking is also on the schedule for next school year. 'Some of the best booger diggers in SMC history are attending the school right now so I thought this would be a great sport not only for the participants, but for the spectators as well," Single and Doubles will form the All Night Booger Picking Tournament to be held in the student center sometime in October. "Students will be given points for getting rid of the boogers as inconspicuously as possible. Flagrant violators will be subject to arrest," the Coach added.

Ice Tennis is a promising sport which has been seen many times on ESPN. SC will begin this sport in January. "Since there are a lot of fools who go out and play tennis when it's 40 degrees--and in shorts at that--a little ice on the court won't stop 'em," the Coach told, the Tennessee Twang. "And yes, skates will be available at the campus shop. They might cost you an arm and an eyelid but most of the fools don't care anyway."

One sport that the whole student body will be sure to look forward to is Ladies Topless Boxing. "We had to get a sport for the women which set them apart from the men, you know, a little uniqueness," the Coach said. "I think with the success of the Brooks who Rumble And Week League (BRAWL) last year, ITB will be a booming success," he said. "They'll be wearing designer shorts and designer shoes so there will be no problem getting sign-ups for this sport." The Tennessee Twang had a photograph of models showing off the new uniforms but the somehow got messed up in the developing process. The sports department of the Tennessee Twang regrets this.

Another sport waiting in the wings is Car Racing which will tentatively get underway as soon as the next school year begins. Apsin Pike will be the drag strip and Four Corners will be the finish line. Both lanes will be used even though regular traffic will not be interrupted. "That will add to the excitement!" the Coach explains. "Just think what kind of wild finish line we'll have because all stop signs must be obeyed. The fastest car with the best brakes will win every time."

I assure you the administration approved of it in time so we can put it on the calendar," the Coach said.

The Intramural seasons will never be the same.
C.A.R.E. Cares

The title sounds like a cheap cliche but it denotes with sincerity the role that Collegiate Adventists Reaching Everyone has come to assume.

The organization previously known as Campus Ministries was fulfilling its role in years past, but the student interest was not rising to what the group thought was its full potential. It seemed to be drawing the same crowd for certain activities every week. The need for a broader program, one that would encompass a larger sector of the college and make activities varied so as to meet more needs, was felt by the Campus Ministries. This year under the leadership of Dale Tunnel, and the guidance of Jim Herman, college chaplain, the Campus Ministries began its year with an immediate change. C.A.R.E. became the new organization, with the purpose of reaching the students through their ministry, and also by allowing students to witness to others in the community.

This turn around proved to be a successful one. From the start of this year a well-organized program schedule followed by good turnouts by the students showed that the planning had paid off. Dale Tunnel is to be congratulated on his fine performance during this year. He has advanced his goals and has certainly given the old Campus Ministries a new look.

There are others, besides C.A.R.E., that have worked to bring their clubs, organizations, and businesses up to par. Much is to be said about this type of individual. Many of us have the potential of planning great programs and plotting great strategies, but a lot of initiative and motivation is needed to turn those plans into reality. It would be far better if we would make fewer plans, yet carry those out.

C.A.R.E. has given us an example of organization and planning this year. Let us begin to set our goals for next year, make them realistic, and then turn those goals into success.

Sheree Nudd to Speak on Creativity

For Southern College Business Series

Sheree Parris Nudd, CFRE, will present "Creativity-Make Them Remember You," tonight at 8 p.m., in Brook Hall at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Sheree Nudd is the director of development and public relations for Hugueley Memorial Hospital in Fort Worth, Texas, where she recently completed a $3 million campaign for a "first in the nation" Health Education and Fitness Center affiliated with the hospital.

In her first two years as development director at Hugueley Memorial, she saw annual fund contributions quadruple. She has co-authored a booklet, "Accent on Philanthropy," a collection of quotable quotes on philanthropy and giving.

An accredited member of the National Association for Hospital Development, Ms. Nudd is one of only about 3000 certified members of the National Society for Fund-Raising Executives in the United States. She has lectured to fund raising groups in the U.S. and Canada on the creative way to motivate.

Mrs. Nudd received her bachelor's degree in communication/mass media from Southwestern Adventist College in 1977, and in 1984 was chosen alumni of the year.

Mrs. Nudd's presentation is part of the 1983 E. A. Anderson Lecture Series. The public is invited to attend free of charge. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

MOWER GOES BERZERK

Dear Editor,

Perhaps I'm overreacting, but I tend to be a little sensitive when it comes to delicate matters like my immediate survival. Allow me to relate an incident.

I was walking down the sidewalk, innocently enough, I suppose, watching a dedicated grounds worker mowing the lawn carpet of vegetation, when suddenly, the frantically spinning blades picked up a small, unidentifiable object (it could well have been a biscuit from the cafe...) and hurled it ruthlessly in my direction.

Before I could react, the object sprang up and took a sizable chunk out of my shin, with all the subtlety of a Greyhound bus.

Now, regardless of what I happened to be screaming at the top of my lungs at the time of the incident, I have no intentions of suing the school. My shins, you see, are a couple of the more embarrassing parts of my body. If my eyes or teeth had been struck, however, I'm not sure they would be so forgiving.

Please understand, I'm not at all criticizing the Grounds Dept. I think they're doing a great job. But to avoid further and more serious incidents of this nature, perhaps some funds could be invested in mower outlet guards?

Sincerely,

G. William Turner

SHEMANDOAH APPROVED

Dear Editor,

We enjoyed "How to be Shemandoah Man" in the March 28 issue. It was a cleverly written and describes the typically Shemandoah man.

However, for those males who may have misunderstood the article as being more than satire, we simply wanted to point out that the SVA gentleness of whom we are acquainted you are among the finest of it is.

We have been known to set such high standards for notoriety by Talge Hall, but also to Southern College.

Sincerely,

I brought it back home. It gets almost every channel, like it?

Hey, TV has come a long way since I loved Lucy.

I dunno. I don't watch TV much.
Reflections
Lifesaver, Anyone?

Charles Swindoll

On a dangerous seacoast notorious for shipwrecks, there was a crude little lifesaving station. Actually, the station was merely a hut with only one boat—but the few devoted volunteers kept a constant watch over the turbulent sea. With little thought for themselves, they could go out day and night resolutely searching for those in danger as well as the lost. Many, many lives were saved by this brave band of men who faithfully worked as a team in and out of the lifesaving station. By and by, it became a famous place.

Some of those who had been saved sat with others along the seacoast wanted to become associates with this little station. They were willing to give their time and energy and money in support of its objectives. New boats were purchased. New crews were trained. The station that was once obscure and crude and virtually insignificant began to grow. Some of its members were unhappy that the hut was so unattractive and poorly equipped. They felt it more comfortable place should be provided. Emergency costs were replaced with lovely furniture. Rough, hand-made equipment was discarded and sophisticated, classy systems were installed. The hut, of course, had to be torn down to make room for all the additional equipment, furniture, systems, and appointments. By its completion, the life-salvation station had become a popular gathering place, and its objectives had begun to shift. It was now used as sort of a clubhouse, an attractive building for public gatherings.

Students making summer employment plans will be interested in the restructurings of advance payment as announced by Randi White, Director of Student Accounts.

An advance payment of $750 for the entire school year is required by August 1. (Formerly, $1000 in advance payment was required—$500 prior to first semester and $500 prior to second semester.)

More good news is that Southern College will be paying students ten percent interest per annum from August 1 to April 10 on that $750. The advance payment plus interest will be refunded as a credit to the student's account on the April statement.

"This plan has some real advantages for students," said Mr. White. "We want every student to know how to plan during the summer and to realize that this is not a flexible or negotiable item." In addition, nursing students and students in college housing have deposits to make as outlined in the information sheet provided by the Admissions Office.

The national media is increasing general awareness that financing of higher education must be a joint venture, with students and, in most cases, their parents sharing in the investment. "Regardless of what's in a student's financial aid package, the advance payment stands distinct as an essential to be earned in a summer job or provided by parents or sponsor or some other resource tapped by the student," added Mr. White.

"Those who earn camp or literature evangelism scholarships are eligible to apply that summer income toward the advance payment requirement," he further explained, expressing a willingness to answer questions on the subject while emphasizing the across-the-board nature of the policy which precluded exceptions.

Advance Payment Will Earn Interest During Next School Year

"Television is really in vogue right now—we're talking State-of-the-Art. TV is educational, it's cultural, and it's an economic means of socially acceptable entertainment."

"Around here, it's also illegal."

"So I'll hide it in the refrigerator."

SC Delegates Return
From AIA Convention

After a weekend full of meetings and a return trip nearly twenty hours long, Southern College’s delegation is back on campus ready to put into practice what they learned. The convention was held on the campus of Union College in Lincoln,
Nebraska from March 28 through April 1.

Leaving approximately 10:45 pm on March 27, K. R. Davis, Director of Counseling, and Robert Merchant, Treasurer for Southern College, led a delegation of ten incoming and outgoing Student Association officers to Union College. The officers who went were J.T.
Shah, current SA President;
Jonathan Wurti, 1985-86 President; Mike Palgrove, current Executive Vice-President; and Cameron Cole, incoming Vice-President.

Other officers who went were outgoing Co-Vice-Presidents for Social Activities Mischei
Yaphung and Bob Folkenberg,
Accent Editor Dennis Negron,
1985-86 Accent Editor Brent
Van Arsdel, this year’s Memories Editor Carol Loone, and next year’s Joker Editor
Paul Ware.

AIA, short for Adventist Intercollegiate Association, is an association of North American S.D.A. college student governments, which has primarily three goals: to represent the collective opinions of S.D.A. colleges; to assist effectiveness in student governments regarding the social, spiritual, and scholastic needs of college students; and to promote communication and cooperation among these student governments.

The format of the AIA Convention calls for much sharing among members. Each school presents ideas and opinions on how to facilitate student government planning.

A important part of the Convention is the election of a new president and the choosing of a site to host the 1986 AIA Convention. Southern College forwarded its campus as a possible site and Dennis Negron as a candidate for president.

Southern College won by majority vote and will host next year’s Convention, but Negron failed in his bid to become president. The new AIA President is Rudy Dennis, former Pacific Union College Student Association President.

As a result of the Convention, next year’s officers for SC consider themselves much more prepared to serve the students.
They hope to implement some of the ideas shared with them in order to make 1985-86 a better year than this one.

to be good is not enough when to be great is what you dream of.

Surrounded by the attentive crew of the Blood Assurance bloodmobile, Alexandra Francis, a freshman at Southern College, demonstrates her attitude of cheerful giving. Miss Francis’ home is in New York City.
A United Nations On Ice

For almost two decades "Ice Around the World"—Europe's counterpart has taken pride in headlining its extravagant acts with the most charismatic performers on ice. The shows directors and choreographers never miss the opportunity to ingratiate themselves with the audience and keep the audience coming back for more. Today, they are constantly on the lookout for new champions to add to their ever-expanding galaxy of star skaters. As these lead performers would be the first to admit, the splendid acrobatics and eye-dazzling appeal of the performances, ouerved equally as much to the synchronized magic of the 20 intriguingly beautiful figures as the fabulous music from the Corps de Ballet. This "cercle de la creme" of impression precise skating talent hails from all over the globe. Australia, Brazil, Canada, Japan, the United States of America and most of the European countries have contributed to International Holiday On Ice's shimmering pool of expertise.

These individuals are hand-picked from among hundreds of young hopefuls who audition for the group during its travels. Since the birth of the group, over 5000 young skaters have been chosen to join the tour.

Many of them learned to skate almost as soon as they learned to walk. All of them spend many years of intensive training to achieve the standard required to be a professional performer. With "Ice Around the World" they are given the chance to turn a hobby into a profession, and perhaps set off on a worldwide adventure.

To maintain the high quality of the show, rehearsals take place each night for the boys and girls of the Corps de Ballet and principal performers. In addition most of the principal skaters spend several hours each day perfecting their routines.

With "Ice Around the World" these performers become part of the family show that sees itself as one big happy multi-national family, the European counterpart often presenting more than 25 nationalities skating in harmony. As a team, the members of this "United Nations on Ice" provide superb live entertainment for family audiences all over the world.

Coming to the U.T.C. Arena, Wednesday, April 10, 1985 thru Sunday, April 14, 1985. Ticket prices are, $8.50, $7.50 and $6.00. Tickets are available at the U.T.C. Arena Box Office and the following Chatta-T-Talk locations: Millenium-Northgate, Lovemans-Eastgate and Downtown locations.

Away From Campus

Jack Wood
Improving Grade School Quality

Teachers across Hamilton County are lifting a page from Japanese quality-control manuals. At six week intervals, teachers attend a after-school "Sharing Circles" to toss around different ideas about teaching. The theory? If Japan can build a better tape deck by investigating its workforce, why can't educators use the same management strategy to crank out better students. The results have proven positive, and the renamed "Curricular Sharing Circle" program was opened to all the county's elementary school teachers this year.

Policemen Threatened

A Chattanooga police officer, scheduled to testify in an alleged bribery case next month, was subject to an anonymous death threat in early March. Patrolman Charles Sivley was told he would be shot if he testified against the operator of a local escort service. Sivley posed as a corrupt policeman for six months when Caesar's Escort Service operator Barbara Slandefer allegedly bribed him. Mrs. Slandefer was charged to four counts of bribery of a police officer in February.

"Trigger Happy Soviets"

"The killing of a U.S. Army officer in East Germany was most likely the act of a trigger-happy Soviet soldier rather than the result of a new get-tough Soviet policy," said U.N. Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick, Sunday. "The Soviets have a tendency to shoot first and inquire later." Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin agreed on Saturday to a meeting of military commanders in Germany to discuss the Nicholai killing.

Blacks Fired Upon

In Johannesburg, South Africa, police fired rubber bullets and tear gas into a crowd of blacks leaving a funeral Sunday near the southern city of Port Elizabeth. Witnesses said one man was killed and ten people were wounded. Several black reporters and other witnesses said that a crowd left the funeral, held for blacks slain in recent violence, and were walking in the township bus terminal when police in armored personal carriers opened fire.

Mother Sleeps, Baby Lives

In Albany, New York, more than a month after a drug was mistakenly injected into her spinal column, 21-year-old Lilian Cedeno remains in a coma, but the premature baby born after she lost consciousness is strong enough to clutch her father's finger. "I have faith that she (Ms. Cedeno) is going to get up from there and we're going to live together," her fiance Tony Valerio said.
Thuesde, Russell, Martin

Once again, America, the Boys of Summer are back! Ah, yes, doubleheaders, diving catches, grand slams, rally killing door slammers, umpire/manager arguments, 6-4-3's, and hot dogs in the sun. That is what baseball is to most people in our great country. But to others, it is ridiculous salaries, long gains, and overrated players. Then again, everybody doesn't live in Cleveland.

Although there is the distinct possibility of another player's strike this season, all the fans are glad that America is about to catch Baseball Fever all over again. Nothing can stop those barroom experts from taking their claims to the team they think will be World Series champs at the end of the year. Nothing can separate the season-ticket holders from their thoughts of hope, inasmuch, nothing can stop the casual fan from having his or her doubts about his or her team. Nothing can stop those wacky "baseball experts" from telling you who will do well during the season and who will falter, and (you know this was coming) nothing can stop Steve, Jerry, and myself from reminding you what we think about this year's pennant races, so here we go!

Thuesde's Picks

AL East

1) Toronto Blue Jays

Finally, coming years of waiting, the Jays will have division winning year. Fine starting pitching, sound defense, and a good offense will be the keys to the team's first ever division title.

2) Detroit Tigers

Bless you boys, you can't do it again.

3) New York Yankees

The Yanks made some good off-season acquisitions to finish right behind the Tigers. The Yankees are strong, but "the start" tell me that injuries will plague their season. Watch out for this creature in the astroturf!

4) Oakland A's

The O's gave themselves a shot in the arm with the addition of Fred Lynn to go along with Edie Murray and Cal Ripken Jr. But Baltimore needs some help from the other six to become division winners, and somehow I don't see that coming about.

5) Boston Red Sox

The Sox will be baseball's most prolific offensive attack with Mike Easler, Wade Boggs, Bill Buckner, Toney Armas, Jim Rice, and Dwight Evans. The Sox also have a new manager (John McNamara) who inherits a promising young staff. But in this division, you need more than a promising young staff" to pull it off. Maybe in a couple of years, Beantown.

6) Cleveland Indians

It's hard to write something positive about the city of Cleveland. Well, at least they've got America's best rock station, WMMAS!

7) Milwaukee Brewers

The Brew Crew will finish last. No questions asked, no doubt about it. Wama bet? O.K. so they've got Cecil Cooper and Robin Yount. Two out of 25 isn't good, now is it?

AL West

1) Kansas City Royals

The Royals will finish first in baseball's weakest division because George Brett, Hal McRae, Willie Wilson, and Dan Quisenberry will shine again after a season of superstardom over the last two years.

2) Chicago White Sox

After doing "the stint" for most of last year, the Pale Hose will get back on track for a fairly good season. Harold Baines will have an MVP-like season and Tom Seaver will be the anchor of the Sox for most of the year.

3) Minnesota Twins

The Twins, behind Kent Hrbek, will have one of their most exciting seasons. Yet "the start" tell me that the bullpen will not cut it this year. Though they have the advantage of playing in the synthetic Hymhury Metrodome, the Twins will make their declines sometime in the second half.

4) California Angels

They're so old. Reggie keeps striking out, and he might even play right field. The Angels are veterans, no doubt, but they may not be able to recapture the top spot this year. Mike Witt will get back on track for the first time in a long time, he is awesome, watch for him.

5) Seattle Mariners

Alvin Davis is one of baseball's bright new stars, but he can't help break the Mariners' tradition of losing.

6) Oakland A's

No Bill Caudill, no Ray Rarris, and no Ricky Henderson spells L-A-S-T-P-L-A-C-E.

7) Texas Rangers

Once again, the Texas Rangers are short on hopes even though they have the next best third baseman in the division in Larry Parrish. But even Parrish can't stop the losing woes in Arlington.

NL East

1) New York Mets

The New York Mets are fielding a team to be reckoned with for the first time in a long time. It's so easy to base the starters on their past, but with a cast like Keith Hernandez, Dwight Gooden, Darryl Strawberry, Gary Carter, George Foster, Ron Darling, and Jesse Orosco, who can help but think that the Mets will have a division winning year? Although Wally Backman and Ray Knight will have to put in their four cents worth to make it a complete thing for the Mets, the feeling is that New York will outlast Chicago in a tough division race--if reputations turn into production, that is.

2) Chicago Cubs

Isn't this strange? Imagine picking the Mets and the Cubs 1-2 in the pre-season. Unusual. Maybe not. The Cubs have a good starting rotation back for a full year in Scott Sanderson, Dennis Eckersley, Steve Trout, Rick Sutcliffe, and Dick Ruthven. The bullpen is O.K. with George Frazier, Ray Fontenot, Larry Sorenson, Warren Brostaux, and big Lee Smith. The question will be if the Cubs can pound out the stuff in the box as they did in '84. By Sandberg leads a cast including Leon Durham, Jody Davis, and Gary Matthews in giving the Cubs run production. Those guys will give the Mets a run for the money. "The stars" tell me that the series between the two clubs will be one of baseball's better ones and the division winner will have no trouble carning the West's champion in the playoffs.

3) Philadelphia Phillies

The Philadelphia Phillies are not as bad as their finish last year may attest to. Al Holland and Mike Schmidt are ready to come back on the stage, but they will only be enough for a third-place finish.

4) St. Louis Cardinals

Everyone is saying that without Bruce Sutter, St. Louis is destined for the cellar. The Cardinals, however, have a good hitting attack and an excellent running team. Neil Allen is no Sutter, but he'll be enough to keep the Cards out of last place.

5) Montreal Expos

(All these years, I still don't know what an "Expo" is.) Montreal had the talent last year, and they didn't pull it off. Now, they know they don't have the talent and they know they won't pull it off. No miracles here.

6) Pittsburgh Pirates

Speaking of lacking in miracles, the Bucs are qualified for this story. Even though they have Tony Pena, Bill Madlock, Steve Kemp, and George Hendrick, only 700 people will actually attend Pirate home games this season. Jose De Leon is a pitcher on the brink of stardom. Now, if only he could get some support...
As was mentioned earlier, when you are on a budget of $5 a day, the only things that really matter are food in your stomach and a place to lay your head. Let’s first concentrate on the task of eating on a shoe-string budget (we call it controlled starvation).

What to eat: The basic staple of the budget-minded European traveler is bread and cheese. Before you despair, though, let us assure you that it’s not as bad as it sounds because Europe has an endless variety of breads and cheeses.

In fact, after a month of traveling we found that instead of being tired of bread and cheese, we had become thoroughly addicted to it! We actually suffered withdrawal symptoms on returning to Newbold and its food.

The shapes, sizes, and types of bread are numerous, so you never have to be subject to the monotony of eating the same thing every meal after meal. We found it helpful to intersperse round bread with long bread, white bread with brown bread, and sweet bread with sour bread—after all, variety is the spice of life.

If you find a particularly cheap price for bread (as in Greece), we recommend buying in bulk. From personal experience, we found that the bread keeps quite well for about four days—then it becomes tough eating—even for strong-jawed veterans of the European crusty bread.

After a month of bread and cheese, you will be a connoisseur of fine cheeses—and not so fine cheeses too. Of course, you automatically think of Switzerland and Austria when you hear the word cheese, and you would expect them to be the best, but we found that they have taken a good thing a little too far. Their cheese is either spiced up so much that it doesn’t taste like cheese or aged so long that one whiff curls your nasal hairs. We preferred something a little simpler.

In Italy, you can supplement your bread and cheese diet with cheap Italian pizza, and in Greece, tangarines can add a little spice (figuratively) to your meals for next to nothing.

Where to eat: We found that most European restaurants don’t appreciate your eating your food on their premises, so stay away from them. Also, we recommend that you avoid eating in public buildings. The men in the post office seem to frown upon people eating in their lobbies. Eating on the street is fine, but try to stay away from the well-traveled sidewalks, as people walking all around you and looking at hurrying legs from eye level tends to disrupt digestion. Otherwise, just let your imagination run wild when it comes to where you should eat your bread and cheese. It helps make the difference between a simple meal and a memorable eating experience. Enjoy!

What teacher has inspired you the most during your stay at Southern College? (asked of seniors)

"Dr. Springlett. He has helped me bear the cross of Greek with a partial smile." —Bill Dubois

"Ragnar. Because he’s cool." —Jerry Russell

"Marie Krull and Bonnie Hunt. They’ve inspired me to be the world’s greatest nurse." —Sharon Keister

"Dr. Richards, because he could walk right into a V.P. finance position of any fortune 500 company, and yet he has dedicated himself to preparing us for the fortune 500." —Garth Thoreson

"Dean Christman. He renew my faith in the concept that Christian education has more of a caring approach versus a public university where you’re just a number in the computer." —Ron Smith

"Dr. Bill Richards because he’s motivating, reasonable, and he knows his stuff." —Carol Laree

Golf Enthusiasts to Compete

In previous years the physical education department has hosted a small scale golf tournament in which groups of students have been allowed to compete in a select shot tourney. The tourney is not limited just men or students of the college. Women can compete in the tournament and non-students too. Once again this year the golf tournament has been organized. The Southern College Spring will be allowed to be set up on the course, tournament fees must be paid in advance. Tournament fees are $5.00 for students and $10.00 for non-students.

Golf Tournament will be played at Nob North Golf course on April 21, 1985. Because The Times must be arranged before hand and because no tournament center Fees must be paid to Ted Evans (Physical Education Dept.) by April 15, 1985.

This tournament will be a four man select shot as usual with two flights. This means that each team will consist of four players with the best shot being taken as the starting point of the next shot.

For more Information contact Ted Evans at 238-2554, or stop by and see him in the Physical Education Center.

Tuition Increases 8.2% for 1985-86 School Year

If a student takes a full load of fifteen hours next year, he can expect to be paying 8.2 percent more tuition than this year. Recently, re-application forms were distributed in the men's and women's residence halls, and on these sheets was the financial information an individual will need to begin planning for the 1985-86 school year.

For a student expecting to be residing in either Talle Hall or Thatcher Hall, the estimated budget runs as follows: Tuition for fifteen hours per semester will be $5220, books and supplies will be approximately $1100, rent will run $1300, and food, at a monthly average of $160, will run $1920. Added up these rates total $9710. This figure is a 7.3 percent increase from the estimated budget for a student this year.

Kenoeth Spears, Southern College's Business Manager, explained that this institution's Division of Nursing: Nursing Passes Inspection

Joni King

Southern College's Division of Nursing is breathing a sigh of relief after having passed inspection. On March 26-29 they were visited by the National League of Nursing for the purpose of accreditation.

An inspection group called a "site visitation team" comes every eight years to assess the policies of structure and governance, curriculum, faculty preparation and experience, student performance, and faculty adequacy in our nursing department. Before they visit, the division must prepare two self-studies of evaluation, done this year by Katie Lamb, with input from the entire faculty. The site visitation team then observes the department to make sure the self-studies correlate with the actual program. They walk around campus, interview the students and faculty, sit in on classes, and inspect facilities.

Overall, the faculty and administration have been very pleased with the team's observations. The site visitation team has noted the unique caring attitude and the supportiveness of the administration. The camaraderie between the administration and the faculty has continued on page 2

41 to Graduate With Honors

With graduation less than a month away, Southern College's Records Office has issued one list of May graduates that will leave this school with honors.

At each graduation, recognition is given to students who have tolled through four years' worth of classes (two year's worth for Associate Degree graduates) and have kept their grade point average (GPA) above 3.50. This year, not including December, 1984, graduates, forty-two students will achieve this honor.

The honors are broken into three categories: Highest honors is given the designation summa cum laude and is awarded to students who have achieved a cumulative GPA of 3.90 or above. Recipients of this honor are Gary W. Budnick and Lori C. Seiby.

High honors is officially magna cum laude and is achieved by having a cumulative GPA of 3.75 to 3.89. The recipients of high honors are:

This year, Southern College is not able to offer new subsidies. This fund will make available to future students scholarships that Southern College is not able to offer now.

In the meantime, the administration has started some budget-saving measures, while attempting to keep the student as comfortable as possible. Last year the Purchasing and Ordering Department was cut out of the budget and now no longer exist. Mr. Spears and Robert Merchant, Treasurer, are sharing the responsibilities that originally were Richard Reiner's, former Business Manager, before he departed to Florida Hospital. Also, the school is still installing energy-saving devices all over campus.

Spears feels that any other budget-cutting measures will not be noticeable by the student.

The Seniors Are Coming!

Matt Larkin

For several years, Southern College has sponsored College Days for academy seniors in order to encourage students to attend this institution. And once again on April 14, academy seniors (from all over the Southern Union area, will be packing buses on their way to S.C.

Upon arriving at Four Corners, the academy buses will be escorted to the college by vehicles driven by the outgoing and incoming Student Association officers. Once on the bus, the students will be directed by the S.A. officers, who will be dressed in Southern nostalgia costumes, to an orientation area, while members of the Southern College band plays a welcoming fan-fare for them. At the orientation area, the students will be briefed on the activities planned for them by the official hosts, Ron Barrow and Everett Schileiner.

A registration tent will be next to the orientation area, where students will check in and receive their meal tickets and any additional information they need. When the students arrive at the dorms, they will each receive their room assignments and information of who they are staying with.

The musical production, The Music Man, will be put on this Sunday at 2:00 p.m. for the academy seniors. The musical will feature Glenn McElroy, Marvin Robertson, Denise Read, Alícia Williams, Rob Shanko, and introduce Michelle Crouwell as Marion Paroo." After the show, the students will have the rest of the afternoon for anything they choose to do until that evening at 8:00 p.m. The Kodak Show, a slide presentation of the land, culture, and people of Greece, will be held at the campus. This presentation was made possible by the work of Dean Schnitzer, who views the show as quality entertainment for everyone.

Immediately following the Kodak Show the S.A. will present a talent show mixer. "This show is a mixture of all the winning contestants of the talent show which was held two weeks ago," describes Co-Vice President for Social Activities, Rob Folkerberg. The talent mixer will conclude the activities for Sunday.

Monday morning the academy senior will rise out of bed to begin a full day of tours, informative meetings, and for some, A.C.T. testing. This day has been designated for students to receive information, and applications for summer or fall classes.

Ron Barrow, Director of Admissions, commented on what it takes to have a successful College Days program. "Every major staff person is needed to help, especially the deans and the food service director. My secretary, Emily Dreiser, has assisted me extensively in the planning for College Days."

Mitsu Yeaply, Co-Vice President for Social Activities, stated her feelings about her past experience at College Days, "I was very impressed with the amount of time and effort that the college put into the program. Most of all, I really enjoyed the southern hospitality that I was greeted with when I came last year. That is something I'll never forget about Southern College."

Christian education is already expensive. It was expensive four years ago when I came to Southern College. Yet little can be done about the problem.

Next year, tuition will rise eight percent above what it is right now. For a student who takes an average of fifteen credit hours a semester and eats under a hundred and sixty dollars in food, the estimated cost for his 1985-86 school year is just below seven thousand dollars. For about twenty-five percent of Southern College’s student population, this figure is approximately half of what their parents make in a year.

Also, an SDA education does not give any guarantees for future employment. Neither do other colleges. But students are less likely now, than in previous generations, to go into the type of debt that a Christian education can get one into for an education that doesn’t guarantee a job. Thus, what is happening is a vicious cycle. Tuition goes up to offset both the increased cost of living and the reduced student enrollment, and students leave because they cannot afford the high tuition.

Little can be done about the problem, but an answer needs to be found.

Claude B. Bass to Speak on ‘Planning For Life and Death’

“Planning for Life and Death” is the topic of the business lecture to be presented by Claude B. Bass, J.D., tonight at 8 p.m., in Brock Hall at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists in Collegedale.

Mr. Bass is currently the vice-president and trust officer for the First Tennessee Bank, where his principal job has been that of financial and estate planning counselor. Mr. Bass has accepted a similar position with Citizens and Southern National Bank of Atlanta, Georgia, effective April 15.

He is a graduate of Baylor preparatory School of Chattanooga, the University of Southern Mississippi, the New York Institute of Finance, and the University of Mississippi School of Law.

Mr. Bass is a member of the Chattanooga Bar Association, the Mississippi Bar Association, the Estate Planning Council of Chattanooga, and Chattanooga Tax Practitioners, as well as serving as a board member of the Chattanooga Visitors and Convention Bureau, and chairman of the Southeast Hamilton County Area Chamber of Commerce.

This presentation is part of the 1985 A. E. Anderson Lecture Series, and annual feature of the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College. Made possible by the generosity of Eugene A. Anderson of Atlanta, this series was designed to stimulate a broader understanding of the business world. A lecture by Thomas M. Zupara, “Philosophy of Starting and Managing a Business Enterprise,” is to be given April 18, concludes the 1985 series.

The public is invited to attend free of charge. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.
Gymnasts to Perform

First year coach, Ted Evans, claims the 1985 gymnastics homeshow will be packed with "good cheer, good fun, and a lot of excitement." This year's show features the Southern College team of 23, plus Bill Copp, the guest trampolinist, who is a former president of the AcroSports Association of America.

The 1985 show features routines of mixed doubles, rings, pyramids, group floor events, and a new mysterious routine done in the dark called "black light." The perennial favorite "Southern Gents" is back along with its new counterpart "Southern Belles."

Within the last school year the SC gymnastic team has traveled 4,000 miles within the Southern Union putting on 11 shows and seven clinics. The shows have had a strong collegiate cheerleader content. Evans says that several of the team members have on occasion worked out with the UTC cheerleaders.

The team is a young team with 60 percent new members. Evans is optimistic about the next few years. "Next year we're planning a trip to Montevideo, Mexico in addition to our regular Southern Union swing."

The show Saturday night will be stronger on team floor events with the rings, baton and trampoline as the exceptions. Julie McClarty is with the team again this year. She is a two-time National Balloon Champion. Dave Perkins is featured on the unicycle and has a juggling act to go along with it.

Evans says the team is practicing some competition routines which have never been seen at a Southern College gymnastics homeshow. These include Black Light, Southern Belles, and the Funke. The doors open at 7:30 p.m., gym capacity is 900 so be early or you won't see much.

Disneyland Still Number 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Thirty years after Walt Disney threw open the gates to what was then the ultimate amusement park, Disneyland remains a Magic Kingdom for kids of all ages.

Its sister park in Florida, Walt Disney World, offers more variety, and the Tokyo Disneyland is new and fresh.

But the original, which sprouted up out of orange groves south of Los Angeles in 1955, shows almost no signs of its age and still ranks as one of the globe's star tourist attractions.

Disneyland has faced some harsh realities in recent years, including an employee strike and apparently decreasing attendance.

But the park continues to serve as a testament to Walt Disney's creative genius and warm feelings for children and their families.

Since Disneyland opened three decades ago, nearly 250 million people have strolled along Main Street USA.

A few attractions have endured for 30 years, including the still-popular Jungle Cruise. But the park, which had just 15 rides when it opened, undergoes constant, gradual change.

A current visitor who'd been there at the opening would find that many of the rides, such as the Mickey Mouse Club Parade and the Flying Saucers, have disappeared over the years.

But there are many new rides—Space Mountain, Big Thunder Mountain Railroad—and others that have been updated and rejuvenated—Submarine Voyage and almost everything in "Fantasyland," one of seven theme areas.

The favorite rides of younger children, 3 or so and under, in-
These Games Are A Mindful

John Diaz

GLASSBORO, N.J. (AP) — It took the Olympics of the Mind almost seven years to find a problem a child could not solve.

The problem was its name, which got the scholastic competition in hot water with the U.S. Olympic Committee.

"I think it's unfair," said C. Samuel Micklus, a co-founder of the competition. "The Greeks used the word Olympics 1,000 years ago. I don't think it belongs to the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Federal law disregards, giving the U.S. Olympic Committee exclusive use of the word, so the mind games have been renamed the OM World Finals this year. Micklus said more than 4,000 schools have become active members, with the finalists scheduled to compete June 5-7 at the University of Maryland.

Micklus, a Glassboro State College physics professor, has been developing games since 1978 to test the creative and technical talents of youngsters in kindergarten through the 12th grade.

He said he had been amazed again and again by the contestants' skill in solving complex problems with simple materials, creating everything from spring-powered vehicles to 18-gram balsa-wood structures that could support 978 pounds of iron weights.

The competition began in the basement of Micklus' house, where he designed the first contest: a maze in which students had to guide a blindfolded player with neither touch nor speech. Micklus likes to add a complication element. In the first challenge he required the blindfolded player to pop a series of balloons with a blow gun. Micklus said one group of youngsters played musical instruments to warn their player of boundary lines, to steer turns and to position the blow gun.

The games caught the attention of educators and journalists to a degree that surprised Micklus.

"I couldn't believe it, (entries) kept doubling every year," he said. "It was going to be a one-time thing."

Within three years, Micklus said, the number of participants, judges, parents and spectators overwhelmed the 1,400-bed capacity of the Glassboro State College dormitories.

The administrative work of the private, non-profit group was also moved from his basement to a small office in Glassboro. His wife, Carol, serves as OM's executive director and is one of four full-time paid workers.

Mrs. Micklus said the theory behind the program is that creativity can be taught, just like learning to play the piano.

At 50, Micklus retains a youthful enthusiasm for problem solving. His appreciation for the "spectator sport" of watching youthful minds at work dates back more than 25 years, when as a high school teacher he challenged students to package an egg so that it could be securely dropped from a high place.

While Micklus works on problems for the 1986 competition in Flagstaff, Ariz., this year's contestants are tackling such challenges as developing a "Smart Pan" robot capable of doing homework and cleanup chores, an "ecology dozer" that can transplant trees with the power of a hydraulic jack and a visual presentation to accompany classical music.

Teams are limited to spending $40 in materials.

"I think we underestimate teachers and we underestimate kids," he said. "We're moving into a super high-tech society, but look at the kids have adapted to it. For them, it's not homework, it's a game."

Are you a true romantic?

(Take this little quiz and find out.)

Put a 1 by each statement which you feel is generally true.

1. The heart is usually wiser than the head.
2. I can get more out of a worship service in a meadow or a grove than in a regular church building.
3. Casual parties are more natural and more fun than formal ones.
4. The purest communication is the silence of two walking side by side.
5. Love is a feeling; no one can explain it, and attempts to do so just cheap it.
6. I feel more comfortable in jeans, (even a stiff, new pair) than I do in formal clothes.
7. I would rather have a job as a tour guide through an old, mysterious castle than as a guide in the Smithsonian Museum.
8. Primitive peoples are generally happier than those in more industrialized countries.
9. Natural things are better than chemically derived things.
10. All you need is love.

TOTAL

1-3 You have a cool head and a classical outlook. This summer ENGL 337 can help you understand the romantics all around you and to find a common touch with them.

4-7 Your outlook is a balance between romantic and classical. ENGL 337 can be a delightful encounter with romanticism, but you are not an idealist in the real world.

8-10 You are an incurable romantic. For you, ENGL 337 can be a delightful encounter with romanticism, but you are not an idealist in the real world.

You've seen trashy imitations on supermarket bookracks. Now meet the real romantics and their heirs.

Europe On $5 A Day... And A Prayer

John Dysinger
Bob Folkenberg

We purposely left the chapter on lodging until last because it is in this area that you can best exercise your imagination. It is a sad fact that most travelers on $5 a day break down when the sun sets and the glaring moon lights of cheap hotels beckon them. To these weary tourists we say, "You got to temptation; or less we shall blow your budget!" But we don't want you to leave standing on the street, staring longingly and forlornly into the windows of those despicable budget-breaking hotels. On the contrary, we would like to see your imaginations with exciting and adventurous alternatives. Trains and train stations are a logical place for penning-traveling travelers to sleep. Plan your journey so that you're arriving as night and sight-seeing during the day. Most continental trains have small, separate compartments for passengers which, with the shutters pulled and the lights out, rival the comfort of any one-star hotel. The only drawback is that the conductor inevitably sells yelling in tickets," just when you've reached the point in your dream where you mother is tucking the covers tight around your chin. But, you've got a good night's sleep. Reality can often be harsh. Most train stations have heated waiting rooms which you can resort to if all else fails—and if you don't mind sharing them with drunks and bums. Empty train cars are another alternative.

If your travels take you near the ocean, we suggest spending the night on the beach. It's best to arrive after dark, though, so you don't know what your surroundings are like. (If you knew, you probably wouldn't get much sleep.) If you should find yourself on a boat with night approaching, skip the berths and head for the car deck. There you will be put to sleep by the squeaks of the Plates and the groans of the lorries. If you are unlucky enough to encounter a storm during the night (as we did), you'll begin to really appreciate the prayer part of "Europe on $5 a Day...and a Prayer." (Especially when the cars start rolling past your brad.)

One of our most memorable nights was spent in the shadow of the leaning Tower of Pisa. It was thrilling to look up at this wonder of the world as it boomed up out of the darkness. But beware, dogs don't appreciate historical beauty! Bob had a hard time cleaning up the next morning. Our hope is that these articles have sufficiently stimulated your imagination and aroused your sense of adventure so that you will want to experience "Europe on $5 a Day...and a Prayer."

New Condominiums Rejected

City planners, Monday, rejected plans for a 300-unit condominium complex in Tyner even though the developer of the $30 million project insists "There isn't one qualified planning executive in the country" who would recommend against the development. During Monday's public hearing, builder Ian Armstrong said that the proposed development would be surrounded by 27 vacant acres and would aid drainage in the area by installing a new drainage ditch. The two-and-three-bedroom condominiums which will sell for $58,500 to $140,000 each "would be a great asset to the entire area," Armstrong said.

Reagan Summit with Gorbachev

The Reagan Administration said Monday that it was pleased that Mikhail S. Gorbachev had agreed in principle to meet with President Reagan but that "much serious work" is needed between this meeting and an impending one in mid-July.

"Police Bug"

A bug forced the Tracy City Police Dept. office to be closed Sunday. It was an electronic bug. Police Commissioner Robin Gear said Monday that the device was planted by a police officer because of a departmental political quarrel. Police Chief Pat Hood acknowledged Monday night he installed the device, but declined to discuss his motivation. He said reasons for planting the device will be discussed Thursday night with the city council.

Daughter Charged with Murder

Deputy Sheriff arrested a 20-year-old woman on charges she killed her father and assaulted her mother by putting rat poison in their beef soup and gelatin dessert. Her reasoning was that they objected to the man she was dating. Andrea Brown of Mississippi was being held without bond at the Hills County Detention Center. Andrew Lew Browe died at the University of Miss. Medical Center on March 20 and his wife was released on the 26th.

Strawberry Festival Coming Soon

Russell E. Werdeman

The Student Association will be presenting its annual Strawberry Festival on April 27, 1985. This eagerly awaited annual event is a multimedia presentation of the year in pictures, a sort of annual in slides. According to Terry Cantrell, this year’s producer, the Strawberry Festival staff has tried very hard to get pictures of all the students on campus. He has had his photographers taking pictures of all the events, people, and places that have made up this year on the Southern College campus. He also stated that this show would be similar to the KODAK show. He will be using 16mm computer-controlled projectors displaying an image on one old slide screen for this year’s snapshot of life on the Southern College Campus.

Vandeman Assaulted By Son

Ron Vandeman, the son of It Is Written’s speaker, George Vandeman, assaulted and wounded his father on Thursday, April 11, 1985. In a telephone conversation with Vandeman’s secretary, Frances Williams, the Southern Accent was told, however, that the evangelist is “very but doing just fine.”

Ron Vandeman, the evangelist’s son, has been suffering from schizophrenia for most of his adult life. Because of this disorder, the junior Vandeman has spent much time in hospitals. Recently, he contracted hepatitis. The medicine which he was regularly taking for his schizophrenia was discontinued.

When visiting his parents at their Thousand Oaks home, Mr. Vandeman was still not taking the medication. Sometimes during the day of April 11, while both men were outside of the home, Ron Vandeman went into an angry rage and assaulted his father. Stabbing him in the back and cutting him on other parts of his body.

A friend of Vandeman’s, Harold Reiner, who happened by at the time of the stabbing, grabbed the son’s arm and persuaded the junior Vandeman to stop the assault. An ambulance was immediately called and Vandeman was rushed to the hospital.

Fortunately, the wounds did not puncture any vital organs, and they were easily treated. Vandeman was released from the hospital the next day after spending the night for observation.

Vandeman is a well-known Seventh-day Adventist television evangelist. He has achieved great success with his broadcast and is almost a celebrity within the Adventist church. His unique speaking style gives clarity to the messages that are heard in many different countries.

Mrs. Williams told the Accent that Vandeman had been planning a vacation for the near future. The accident has delayed his plans and will not hinder any It Is Written telecast.

Vandeman’s assault was broadcast on the World News regular noonday broadcast. Harvey, when describing Vandeman, said he was “a gentleman, and when I say gentleman, I mean a gentle man.”

Vandeman is recuperating in his California home.

Walther, SMC’s First Academic Dean, Dies

Dr. Daniel Walther of Colledgeal, Tennessee, died Friday, April 12, at the age of 83. A native of Switzerland, Walther played an important part in many of the Seventh-day Adventist schools, including Southern College when it was called Southern Missionary College.

Walther first came to SC when it was a junior college. He taught in the history department and was Dean of Men for one year. When the school was given senior status and subsequently named Southern Missionary College, Walther was named the first Academic Dean of the institution; being only one of two doctors here. This post he held from 1941 to 1946.

After teaching at the theological seminary in Washington, D.C., following that institution for 21 years, he was old enough to retire but still served our overseas sister colleges. His work overseas brought him to Solihull College, Hedingham college, and Colonge.

Southern College’s former President Dr. Frank Knittel invited Dr. Walther to retire in Collegeal while the latter was still at Colonge. This Walther did, yet he still taught a class or two in our history department. Walther had been a native of Collegeal for ten years before dying in his home last Friday. The funeral was held last Monday, April 15. He is survived by his wife of 49 years, Louise Ollen Walther, his son, Dr. David Walther of Concord, Massachusetts, and four grandchildren, Erika, Hilary, David, Jr., and Ryan.

College Days Ends

Matt Larkin

Monday, April 15, several bus loads of academy seniors left the Southern College campus to return to their prospective schools, with some of them continuing their class trips to other areas. The students enjoyed two days of being entertained, learning about a future at S.C., and making new friends. The activity that these students enjoyed included the Music Man play, the Kodak show, and the S.A. talent show mix, which concluded Sunday’s packed schedule for them.

The next morning, the seniors met at the gym for the annual continental breakfast and were further informed of the days events. Campus tours, information about getting into S.C, and some ACT tests were included in the students’ schedule. Some students even were given the opportunity to watch classes in progress.

Over six hundred students were estimated to have come for college days. Several of them expressed their appreciation to the college for the real “southern hospitality” they received. Pam Denan of Indiana said that she enjoyed college days in spite of the poor weather. From Bass Memorial Academy, Chip Hinkis stated his feelings about the college’s interest in the students: “I was really impressed with the effort that the school went in order to make all of the seniors feel at home. This is just one reason I’m planning to attend this campus this fall.”
Thank You, All

With the semester coming to an end rather quickly and with only one more issue of the Southern Accent to publish, I dedicate this editorial to my staff. The production of a newspaper is not easy. It takes the utmost cooperation of a host of people if the system is to run smoothly. I believe that the staff I had this year has been top notch, and because of that fact, we have accomplished our goal of putting out a professional newspaper. (And we have put it out early.)

Above all, thanks should be given to two people who are not on the staff but have played important parts in the production of the Southern Accent. First of all, Dr. Ben McArthur is thanked for always keeping foremost in the minds of the editorial staff that professionalism is what marks a quality newspaper, such as the New York Times, from a trashy tabloid, such as the National Enquirer. Secondly, Miss Frances Andrews must be thanked for allowing us to come to her when we needed journalistic advice. I thank my editorial staff for not only helping me put the paper out on time, but for teaching me to be a better manager. John Seaman, my Assistant Editor, gets the biggest thank-you of all for sharing with me the experience he had accumulated during the two years he served on former Southern Accent staffs. And Bob Jones, my Layout Editor, is thanked for showing me that a relaxed, more humorous atmosphere is easier to work in. These two men and I have three distinct personalities, but we have become life-long friends.

The other important people who must be thanked are the following: Thank you, Pam Steinman, Maribel Soto, and Lynnette Jones, for doing a good job of typosetting. Thank you, Jay Dedeker, for doing perhaps the most thankless of all jobs, that of retrieving the bundles of Southern Accents from the printers every Thursday morning and distributing them throughout campus. Thank you, Jerry Kovalski and Richard Gayle, for your photographic knowledge. The pictures have been great. Thank you, George Turner, for the humor you have instilled in the paper through "Behind Closed Doors."

Finally, I thank the most important people of all, my reporters. Without them, the Southern Accent would be nonexistent. They are the ones who have dug up the stories I have assigned each week, writing them up and getting little in return. This space doesn't allow me to name each of them, but I wish I could. This year has been fun. Thank you, all.

Zapara to Speak on Business Management for Southern College Business Series

The "Philosophy of Starting and Managing a Business Enterprise" is the subject of a lecture by business executive Thomas M. Zapara, tonight, April 18, at 8 p.m., in Brock Hall at Southern College of Seventh-Day Adventists in Collegedale. Mr. Zapara is board chairman and president of Life Support Products, Inc., and lives in Corona Del Mar, Calif.

After attending La Sierra College in California, and the University of Indiana, he began his professional career in sales for a pharmaceutical company. In 1953 he formed his own company, Zee Medical Products Co., Inc., which he sold to McKesson Corporation in 1983. The company specialized in industrial first aid service and training. In 1980 he acquired a small emergency medical equipment manufacturing company, which in 1984 merged with another company to form the present entity.

Zapara is a member of the General Conference Board of Higher Education and past president of the Loma Linda Board of Councillors, as well as one of the organizers of Business Executive Challenge to Alumni (DECA).

Mr. Zapara's presentation concludes the 1985 E. A. Anderson Lecture Series presented by the Division of Business and Office Administration at Southern College. He will be participating in a weekend Southern College Business Club retreat at Fall Creek Falls State Park before returning to California, according to his host, Dan Rorex, associate professor of business administration.

The public is invited to attend the lecture free of charge. A question and answer period will follow the presentation.

Dedication Service for Student Missionaries Held Tomorrow Evening

Alan Starbird

As the school year comes to a close and final plans are being made for next year, a few students are preparing to spend their time overseas. The Best of Britain tour and the Mexico tour will take some students out of the United States for the summer, but still others are going on a different type of trip as student missionaries.

A student missionary usually goes overseas to teach English or math to the citizens of the country he/she is entering. A term lasts from six to twelve months, beginning for most students in August. This year twenty-three students will be involved in this program.

The areas that have the most student missionaries going to it are Korea and the Marshall Islands. But this year Chris Hansen will go to Iceland, a first for student missions (known as Collegiate Missions on campus).

Talking to a taskforce worker—a missionary to the United States—Michael Exum, I asked him his reason for entering the Collegiate Missions program. "It is a good way to help other people and get a few things straight in your own mind."

This Friday night, April 19, will be the dedication service for this year's student missionaries. Thomas Ashlock of the General Conference will be the guest speaker. This Christmas lighting service is kommered by the former student missionaries leading next year's group to the front of the church. After Elder Ashlock speaks, each new student missionary is given a candle which is lighted by a former missionary. The service ends with a communion service for the new group.

This dedication service is often a well-attended meeting because of the specialness surrounding it. All students are encouraged to come.
Do You Drink Diet Soda?

Lori Heinsman

A-B-C-F-Gee, I love junk food! I guess my favorite junk food is plain chocolate M & Ms. They're colorful, tasty, and they are the favorite candy of some good buddies of mine who live in the foothills near here. Their names are Eddie, Alex, David, and Michael. Anybody know them?

Anyway, I'm sitting here snacking on M & Ms and drinking diet 7-up. Shaken, not stirred, you see. I'm actually drinking NutraSweet water! I swore to a friend last summer that I would never drink diet soda because I was sure NutraSweet was carcinogenic. Actually, I still agree with myself. It probably does cause cancer, but what else do you expect me to drink with my fattening M & Ms? I'll never get on a Tab commercial unless I drink something diet. (I hate Tab.)

So why do I risk my health by drinking and eating poorly? Perhaps I do it in an effort to fit into the college yuppy stereotype. We're supposed to be carefree party animals, yet make the Dean's List, thin and athletic, yet eat junk, and have a hot date every night. If we don't have all that, we are failures at life.

When I was in high school, it was cool to stand over by the junk food machines. Located near the cafeteria, the "machines" were the school hang-out. What a learning experience! We observed people taking up collections for junk food money. We watched guys pound on the machine when it stole their 35 cents. In fact, we experienced inflation when the potato chip price hiked up to a whopping 40 cents. And, my brother says he could tell a girl's personality by the junk food she ate. (I usually ate barbecue-flavored corn chips. I wonder what that says about me?)

Why were we teenagers addicted to Lance snacks?

Because it was cool.

Is this our reason for drinking diet soda?

Could be. Diet is in since thin bodies advance us as yuppies. And to be a yuppy is to be a real person, right?

Each of us wants to fit in and be popular. If I could have told all those College Days kids one thing, it would be that they are okay just the way they are, yup or no yup. Being yourself is fine.

God doesn't want all of us to be yuppies. That's why we all are different. Being different means God made me someone special. Your being different means that is the case.

I might drink that diet soda to be thin, to be part of an group, but I don't have to. God didn't plan it that way. I think that's great. You know what else is great?

Even you don't have to drink diet soda if you don't want to.

Ornithology Field Trip to Florida

E. O. Grundt

During the recent spring vacation, the 26 members of the ornithology class together with their instructor, E. O. Grundt, and two lab instructors, Clyde Blum and Russell Dukersel, travelled over 2500 miles through Florida. Using two school vans and other modes of transportation (boats, trains, planes, etc.) and armed with telescopes, binoculars, and a variety of cameras, the group visited scores of "birding spots" as Cape Canaveral, Payne's Prairie, Lake Tohopekaliga, Loxahatchee Wildlife Refuge, Shark Valley in the Everglades, Sanibel and Captiva Islands, Corkscrew Swamp, Discovery Island Bird Sanctuary, plus numerous "sudden stops" along bays, estuaries, swamps, irrigation ditches, forests, and roadside parks. Most of the named places are either state or national parks where a special effort is put forth to protect and decline considerably unless much-needed rain refills the ponds and marshes. Other interesting and unusual (to the class, anyway, many of who had hardly noticed any bird life heretofore) were the Great Black-backed Gull, Great Egrets, Magnificent Frigatebird, the soaring swallow-tailed Kites, close-up views of Barred Owls, numerous wading ducks, Scrub Jays, Ospreys, and Bald Eagles (some of them nesting). The class spent an informative time at the Florida Audubon House, where injured birds are rehabilitated and then released whenever possible. The methods of caring for these injured birds were explained to the students.

At Payne's Prairie in northern Florida the class observed hundreds of Sandhill Cranes (until the backfire from one of the vans sent them all scattering over our heads!), warblers, preserve wildlife.

The purpose of the trip was to observe as many species of birds as possible and also to notice the variety of birds and how they change from habitat to habitat. Florida provides at least seven or eight distinct zoogeographical zones--shores, marshes, central plains with its lakes, the Everglades themselves, thousands of offshore islands, forests, and rolling hills. All these areas have their indigenous bird populations--some permanent and others simply visitor visitants.

High on the list of rare birds seen would be the Snail Kite which the class spotted after an enduring 6-mile hike in the Shark Valley area. This particular hawk feeds on a single species of apple snail which this year is in short supply due to the worst drought Florida has seen in 28 years. The 500 or existing birds are destined to die out soon.

C.A.R.E. Begins Plans For Next Year

Bill Dubois

Several years ago, the position of Assistant Chaplain was created to meet the increasing need for an organized approach to get students excited about spiritual involvement on and off campus. The Campus Ministries Department has seen a tremendous growth, particularly as young men with high aspirations have attempted to build an increasingly more efficient program.

Under the capable leadership of Dale Tunnell, this department shifted its gears this year by changing its title from "CAMPUS MINISTRIES OFFICE" to C.A.R.E. (College Adventists Reaching Everyone). The reason is that the C.A.B.L. (College Adventists for Better Living) aspect of this program was often neglected and de-emphasized. Dale felt that the name C.A.R.E. would be a more inclusive title, recognizing Campus Ministries and C.A.B.L. Ministries on the same plateau.

Next year's Assistant Chaplain, Bill Dubois, is already making plans for next year's C.A.R.E. program. Bill feels that good solid leadership will be one of the greatest contributors to an actively successful C.A.R.E. program.

Bob Folkensberg, senior theology major, will be the Campus Ministries director next year. His enthusiastic manner will be a greatly anticipated asset to the program. Assisting Bob as On-Campus in-reach director will be Doug Rowland, Junior theology major. Through his promotion of on-campus activities, the students may find themselves in the thought that they will be informed.

John Dyzing, Junior theology major has willingly accepted the challenge of being C.A.B.L. director next year. John's goal is to bring a greater awareness of C.A.B.L.'s role on and off campus. Jerry Russell, Junior business and P.E. major, will be a tremendous asset as he uses his P.E. skills to assist John next year.

Many of the present programs will continue, along with the arrival of several new ones. Junior (acceptance) outreach will work with area young people in need of help in their personal problems. Dial-a-friend will be a 6-8 hour a day call during listening hotline. Prayer chain will consist of a nucleus group who prays for each other daily.

C.A.B.L. will begin to travel area high schools and academies and present interesting health talks. Current plans are to have a student fitness awareness program that will evaluate your health in all areas weekly, dealing with specific therapies to increase your fitness. Also, it is hoped that a weekly health article will appear in the Accent.

Bill sums up his goals for next year, "I realize that many students would feel uncomfortable having Campus Ministries and C.A.B.L. holding an equal role with the Student Association. But why shouldn't it? After all our school has been founded on religious principles and why not promote them by means of a top-notch, exciting, and challenging program like C.A.R.E. (College Adventists Reaching Everyone)."

P.S. So C.A.R.E. can best meet your needs and interests, we are implementing a questionnaire for every student to fill out and return to the designated boxes in the dorm lobbies.
Getting Ready For Those Final Exam Blues

Reduce Your Stress Level

Stress levels, although high throughout the year, generally "sky rocket" during the last two weeks of school. The reason is that final exams are close. Students wish to do well on these tests because often much emphasis is put on their results.

If you plan ahead carefully, you can avoid a lot of stress, but not all of it. Here are some tips for handling study-related stress.

Before you start to study:
1) Sit down, be lean back, close eyes, and listen to yourself breathe, then breathe deeply three times, begin working.

Break tension during a long study period by:
1) Getting up and moving around the room.
2) Bending deeply three times.
3) Bending at the hips, then relaxing upper body.
4) Bending and bouncing toward toes, touching them three times, and going back to work.

Before a stressful situation:
1) Hold a mental dress rehearsal.
2) Go through a step-by-step plan of action.
3) Imagine yourself successfully handling the situation.

Deep muscle relaxation is a good way to avoid stress build-up. Simply sit up in a comfortable chair in a quiet room. Tense each muscle group, one after the other, for a count of ten. Then relax the muscle groups and notice how much better you feel when relaxed than when tense.

- Tighten your hands into fists; then relax them.
- Straighten your arms, and tense the muscles along the arms.
- Bend your arms to tense the bicep muscle.
- Pull your shoulders back to tense the shoulder muscles.
- Lean your head back to tighten your neck muscles.
- Winkle your brow.
- Clench your jaw.
- Tighten your chest muscles.

Put out with your abdomen muscles. Fill your lungs with air. As you exhale, try to release any remaining tension. Repeat this step two or three times.

- Push your heels against the floor and tighten your thigh and leg muscles.
- Raise your heels to tense your calf muscles.

Repeat the process for any area where tension remains.

Tips on How to Study for Those Tests

For most of you, final exams are on your mind constantly these days, even though you are probably trying not to think about them. But the thought of cumulative tests, essay exams, and two-hour tests tends to linger in one's mind whether or not he has faced a college final exam week before.

Final exams scares people because they are not sure if they can remember all the material that has been covered in a particular, especially one like Anatomy or Physiology.

The following plan for textbook study was scientifically designed after research was conducted to see how students learn and remember best. The average student forgets 80 percent of what he or she has read after two weeks (the amount of time left before exam week).

Using the method called SQRRR, forgetting is reduced to 20 percent. Further review means retention of 90 to 95 percent. The initials stand for survey, question, read, recite, and review.

Survey means to take a quick over-all look at the entire assignment you intend to study.
1) Read the introduction to the chapter.
2) Note the chapter title—this is the main topic.

Read each boldface heading—these are the most important points under the main topic.
3) Read each first sentence (generally it is the topic sentence) in each paragraph. It contains the meat of the paragraph.
4) Watch for italics and see why they were used.
5) Check for key words, such as first, third, or finally—these may denote a series of thoughts.
6) Inspect all charts, diagrams, maps. They are there to accentuate and illustrate the most important ideas.
7) Read the summary at the end of the chapter. Look for "words to be learned," or questions the author has included.

Question means to turn the chapter title and each subheading into a question. 1) Example: Chapter Title: "Government of the People: The Participating Citizen." Question: What does the participating citizen have to do with the government of the people? First sub-heading: "The voting process." Question: What does the voting process consist of? Read means to read the assignment section by section.

Stop to make up a question which you jot down as you come to each heading. Read the section looking for the answer to your question. Stop and write the answer when you finish reading the section. Do not proceed until you can answer the question.

Recite means that as you read the assignment, you recite aloud or write the answer to each question.

Review means a quick look of all the material studied in that particular session. If you find questions you cannot answer, do not re-read the entire chapter, just re-read the part you need to know. Review by covering the answers and asking yourself the questions.

This method may turn out to be of great help in the next two weeks.

The above article was adapted from the Freshman Orientation book composed by the Teaching Learning Center of Southern College.

Fall Tuition Hikes May Top Inflation Once Again

Sarah Skorupa
WASHINGTON, D.C. (CP) -- Students will pay more to go to college next fall, as tuition rates rise faster than the inflation rate once again, colleges around the nation report.

Student costs will go up even though campuses in general are getting more money from state legislatures, invested endowment funds and corporate contributors.

"States that are doing well are funding higher education at a higher rate," says Richard Novak of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU).

But the colleges themselves are using the money "to make up for lost ground," he adds.

The schools must facilitate overdue salary hikes and start paying for campus maintenance put off during the late seventies and early eighties, new construction, and research and high-tech equipment expenses, explains Bill McNamara of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities (NAICU).

Many schools -- especially private colleges -- are using their own funds to replace federal student financial aid cuts, he adds.

Moreover, many states want students to pay a greater percentage, this year up to 35 percent in some places, of what it actually costs to educate them, says David Kite, Eastern Tennessee State University's comptroller.

"In those halls, McNamara believes the tuition increases are probably reasonable. The rate of increase is still ahead of inflation but it's been going down the last few years."

"Things are better this year, especially in the Great Lakes states and in the far West," AASCU's Novak agrees. "The Southeast and Northeast will have tight, hold-the-line budgets with only inflationary increases."

In Tennessee, that means a nine percent more tuition at ETSU and a 10 percent hike at the University of Tennessee, largely because of a state Higher Education Commission requirement that students pay a $1 tuition fee for each $2 the state pays, ETSU's Kite explains.

Nine percent is "about the average" tuition increase for resident students at state schools, NAICU's McNamara estimates.

Private college students in general may face a little better, paying an average of 7.5 percent more "based on reports we've had from our member schools," McNamara says.

But tuition in North Dakota is going up to 10 percent, while New Mexico students could face a 16 percent hike.

Harvard, Yale, MIT and Princeton will all jump tuition up by about seven percent, while Southwestern Missouri and Kentucky plan increases around 10 percent.

Community colleges, too, are raising their prices next fall.

Oregon's Chemeketa Community College is going up five percent, but tuition at Washington's Big Bend Community College is rising some 23 percent, over the next two years.

At Rochester and Miami, the increases could reach 12 percent.

Nebraska will raise tuition because the legislature wants to raise student share of education costs as tuition is going up 12.5 percent.

"We've reached the level that we feel is proper for the student to pay for his education," university spokesman Jacob Wamsley says.

A Way From Campus

Jack Wood
Edgar Made Judge

On Monday the U.S. Senate confirmed R. Alan Edgar as U.S. district judge in Chattanooga. The confirmation was by unanimous consent. Edgar will succeed H. Ted Milburn, who was named last year by President Reagan to the U.S. 6th Circuit Court Appeals. Monday's action ended a seven-month-long confirmation process plagued by delays, and removed the last obstacle between Edgar and the federal bench.

TVA Employee Concerns

The federal government has delayed licensing Watts Bar Nuclear Plant near Spring City, Tenn., until TVA can convince its workers that whistleblowing on safety issues won't cost them their jobs, a top TVA official said Monday. The problem is that TVA employees have called the Nuclear Regulatory Commission indicating that they and possibly other employees are reluctant to come forward and identify what they think might be problems relating to nuclear activities.

Inmates Revolt

About 200 inmates took control of a section of the Clair County Correctional Facility, Monday at around 9:20 a.m. Seven employees were injured during the uprising, including two who were beaten unconscious. At 8 p.m. state officials announced the inmates agreed to release their hostages. The inmates' demands ranged from "requests to grow beards and long hair to more freedom in the institution."

Valerie in 12th Surgery

The 7-month-old Chattanooga girl, who already survived two liver transplants and nine other surgeries, was wheeled into an operating room in Pittsburgh at 12:30 p.m. Monday. In a four-hour procedure, surgeons removed the right lobe of her liver.

The hospital said the operation was needed to stop an abscess. Valerie was doing well Monday night, a hospital spokeswoman said at 8 p.m., but had not been out of surgery long enough to be in stable condition.

Son Kills Father

In Brooklandville, Maryland, a 3-year-old boy, who fatally shot his father with a handgun picked up from a bedside table, is too young to be charged with any crime, a police officer said Monday. James Colwell was shot while he was sleeping. The wife and husband had been eating pizza in the bedroom. While the wife went into the kitchen to clean up, her son must have seen the gun. When she returned she saw the boy on the other side of the bed with gun in his hand, and when she tried to take the gun away from him, it went off."

Prof's Illness Pitches Florida Into Measles Panic

GAINESVILLE, FL (CP) -- When Geology Professor Evan Dubolsky contracted measles last month, word traveled fast.

Within 24 hours, panicked students were swamping the Santa Fe Community College health clinic, further frightened when substitute teachers in Dubolsky's classes reported the professor was battling measles-guts as well as measles.

The panic spread across a wider part of Florida, and raised fears students visiting for spring break would soon have the whole state erupting with the disease.

Their worst fears, along with the huge student epidemic, never happened.

Students already were uneasy since a pediatrician resident at a Gainesville hospital developed the highly-contagious rubella, reports Steven McNelly of the city health department.

But, when Dubolsky was hospitalized, "it put the scare into people," he adds.

"We had at least 25 people a day," reports Health Services Coordinator Nancy Whless.

"They wouldn't believe what they came in for. Everything from sore throats, the common cold, acne, even just pimples." State and county health cases occurred among students visiting the state for spring break, McNelly notes.

"We had lots of threats, but no major outbreaks," he says.

"There were only 10 cases reported in a county population of 100,000," Whless says. "That's not an epidemic."

Though Dubolsky recently returned to class, the scare subsides, Whless says. "The students didn't believe anything they read," she says.

They held to call or come in to confirm what they learned on radio, tv and in the papers.

"And there's no doctor here," she adds. "I'm just an R.N. and the county health department wouldn't back up an inoculation program on campus, so I just sent students to the health department for free inoculations.

"We've asked all college presidents to consider immunization clinics," says McNelly. "We don't want to scare or panic students, but we do want to make them aware they're susceptible and should do something about it."

"It's best to try to get the facts across," he adds.

Weightlifters' Tourny a Success!

J. Randolph Thuesdee

Last Wednesday night, Talge Hall held its first annual weightlifter's tournament. Far from anything so many of us are used to seeing in the Olympics, the turn out for the first annual event was very good.

Allen Valenzuela won the All-Around Trophy as he lifted a combined 995 lbs. Stan Hickman, SC Weightlifter's Club president, lifted a combined 865 lbs. for second place.

In the lightweight division (body weight 165 and less), Steve Williams captured first place with 855 lbs., with Brad Senska coming in second as he lifted 820 lbs.

The heavyweight division (body weight 186 and over), Hickman easily outlasted David Hurd's 785 total lbs. and Ray Collins' 678 lbs.

Interestingly, Valenzuela won the All-Around Trophy while competing in the middleweight division.

Ornithology...

viciss, and woodpeckers. At Sanibel Island's Ding Darling National Wildlife Drive-through a meandering road taking you from one bay and inlet to another all of which are filled with herons, mergansers, and shore birds—here is where we saw the one and only Black-necked Stilt.

All was not work—there were amusing moments as when a SC Florida Campus nursing student, Libby Riano, ventured out in the mud flats at Black Point north of Titusville and sank up to her waist in sticky, smelly muck. Much to her chagrin, no one came to her rescue until everyone had recorded the event on their cameras! And...we celebrated Jonathan Walr's birthday, played games, awarded prizes for seeing the first Cattle Egrets (Jeff St. Clair), got lost, took the wrong exit, slept on gym floors, held endless discussions about where we should eat, went to the beach, toured Discovery Island's aviaries, counted individual birds (Red-tailed Hawks, American Keetrels, Belted Kingfishers) and marvelled at the unbelievable plumage of the Purple Gallinules and Common Moorhens.

All too soon the trip ended and thirty individuals were no longer strangers but 'friends for life.' We returned with the knowledge of how and where to look for birds and with a greater appreciation for each other. As one weary birdwatcher said when getting off the van for the last time, "It was a great trip, I'm worn out, but let's do it again!" And... we probably will!
Interest In life Stalls Aging

WASHINGTON (AP) -

Rosina Corrothers-Tucker, 102, and Ruth Clark, 97, are too busy to worry about diet and exercise.

"Perhaps, they suggest firmly, that is why they've lived such long and happy lives."

"I eat anything I want," Mrs. Corrothers-Tucker of Washington, who will turn 103 in November, told the Senate Labor and Human Resources subcommittee on aging last fall.

She said she sleeps six or seven hours a day and does not have a regular exercise routine, "but I take care of my house and make the beds, do the laundry and cook. That's exercise."

Miss Clark, 97, of Warwick, R.I., said, "We believe in plenty of laughs and many interests, the first of which for me was music."

Other interests include oceanography and the Boston Red Sox baseball team.

She told of hitchhiking through Vermont in her 70's traveling to England and Spain at 81, and being the oldest student at a Rhode Island junior college.

"In my opinion, it is the continuing interest in the variety of subjects noted above that greatly enhance one's life that everyone must learn to endure," Miss Clark said.

Whatever the secrets, research scientist Dr. Alan L. Goldstein -- who also testified at the hearing -- said the lives of both women may hold important clues about the role of genetics in disease prevention.

"The way you think about life can influence your lifespan and your health," said Goldstein, chairman of the department of biochemistry at George Washington University Medical Center.

But Goldstein, who co-discovered the family of hormones produced by the thymus gland, which controls the immune system, said there is a major genetic component in almost every disease.

Mrs. Corrothers-Tucker, who helped found the International Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters in the 1960's, said most of her family lived until their middle to late 80's. Her grandparents lived into the mid-90's and a great-grandfather until 101.

Miss Clark said her mother lived to 70 and her father to 74. Her grandmothers lived at 89 and 81 and her grandfathers at 78 and 75.

"The potential at using the body's own natural immunity to deal with disease on a rational basis may well become the most dramatic development that has occurred in medical science in this century," Goldstein said.

"We have the possibility to help improve the health and quality of life of the American public dramatically in our lifetime, and in particular the elderly whose immune systems are weakened," he said.

Yet with all that, Mrs Corrothers-Tucker prefers to look for answers to her longevity in spiritual rather than medical terms. "My life is in God's hands and I will live till his purpose is over," she said.

Spring busting out all over with blossoming dogwood (white and pink), red bud, apple, peach, and pear trees, not to mention tulips, daffodils, pansies, wild violets, and mustard, but, alas and alack, no azaleas--thanks to last January's terrible freeze;

Camps, picnics, over-night hikes, banquets, and dinners--almost every class, club, and organizations seems to be planning something "memorable" to cap-off the school year;

Teachers suddenly realizing that "there's just one week left" frantically duplicating worksheets, outlines, lists of "things to know" while the more methodical, organized types already have their finals made out and safely barricaded inside office file-lockers--all of which doesn't soften the students' last minute wave of panic and frustration especially when they see signs on the blackboard such as "Everything is due on Tuesday;"

Waves of warblers and other migrants suddenly materializing as if out of nowhere and challenging all birdwatchers to get out there and start identifying--they'll be gone tomorrow. Many of the high-pitched "honks" we hear overhead are not Canada Geese but more likely Sandhill Cranes;

College Days, parades, The Music Man, Award's Chapel, Home Concerts, the debut of Southern Memories, the beginning of baseball (together with endless 'in-depth analyses' of every player), dedicating the Student Missionaries, the last Chatter and Accent;

The Strawberry Festival (after we see the pictures we agree that it was a pretty neat year after all), academic regalia, final examinations (do you have your permits?), and Commencement;

The end of the school year!

Awards Chapel Today

Southern College's annual awards chapel will be held Thursday, April 18, in the P.E. Center. The awards chapel is an occasion when students who have excelled scholarship and on the job are publicly recognized for their efforts. Most divisions participate and awards range from public recognition to the payment of full tuition for the following year.

Salute your favorite graduate!

Graduation is quite an achievement! Mark the occasion with a special remembrance that shows you care. We have a wide selection of gifts, cards and partyware for graduates of all age.

Gifts look extra-special when the package sports a graduation motif. And our "instant gift wrap" boxes make the wrapping quick and easy. Only $1.75!

The college graduate will love the professional look of a fine wood writing instrument from Hallmark. Pens start at $22.50; pens and pencil sets start at $45.00.

Say "congratulations" with a Hallmark graduation card. Our wide selection includes ones that's just right for your favorite graduate.

Where Do We Go From Here?

(I am allowing myself to do something in this final editorial that I have not done all year. The subject this week is religious in nature.)

Final exams are the only items that separate us from the end of another school year. So where do we go from here? Seniors move on to either a job or graduate school. The undergraduates move on to the next level of study or also a job. Professors and administrators may choose another position or may they look forward to leading another group of students in the Fall.

These future plans do not answer the question fully, however. After having attended a Christian college for the 1984-85 year, where do we go from here? Sure, we have attended this institution for the purpose of receiving an education. But to give us one was not the sole reason Southern College was created. Another purpose was to bring its students closer to Christ.

Some of us have attempted to close our minds to any of the Christian influences found on this campus. For example, some have skipped chapel, worshiped, Sabbath Schools, and church, if not with our bodies, then with our minds. Some have elected not to participate in the C.A.R.E. programs. Some have refused to talk religion. And some have refused to show a Christian witness. Commencement goes to the one who has been able to do all of the above, but it still goes to the one who has done just one.

Perhaps someone is saying at this moment that in order to do the above acts, one must have made a decision to be a Christian. And that is my point. If the decision hasn't been made yet, then what will be made? Will it be made? Too many incidents this year have shown us the finiteness of man—Scott Yankelovitz's death, Doug Stepanek's accident, Howard Bankes' accident. Fortunately, the last two students were not killed.

The decision is important. If it hasn't been made yet, then it should be made soon. The greatest gift is this decision is so easy to make. We only need to say it to the Lord. We'll still sin, but because of that aspect of being a Christian called forgiveness, we are still Christians.

Even more important is that we will know where we are going from here. We will go our separate ways, but we will have one destination, heaven.

Georgia-Cumberland Constituency Chooses New Leadership

Dennis Negron

Nearly seven hundred delegates, representing the Georgia-Cumberland Conference, met at the Georgia-Cumberland Academy Gymnasium on April 21 for the Triennial Constituency Meeting. Rework on this conference's constitution, reports from the education system and the publishing work, and the election of the executive officers that will lead the next three years were on the agenda.

It was the election of a new president that caused the greatest stir and took the greatest amount of time, however. Gary Patterson, the Georgia-Cumberland Conference president for the last six years, was not re-elected for a third term.

The constituency meeting started at 10:00 a.m. But the elections did not start till 7:30 p.m. A nominating committee, chosen earlier in the day for the purpose of bringing names of potential officers to the floor, had been dismissed at 3:00 p.m to meet on their own. However, this committee apparently could not decide on a person for president, to be voted on first, because it met for over three hours.

The name the committee brought to the floor was not Gary Patterson's, but John Loo's, current President of the Northern New England Conference. Loo is a former pastor of the Collegiate Church and was well spoken of by a large amount of delegates who remembered his tenure in this conference. However, after the discussion had ceased and the votes had been counted, the candidates decided against Loo by the slim margin of 252 to 245. This slim margin was to set the precedents for future voting.

An individual made a motion to reconsider Loo's name since the margin of defeat was so narrow and over 100 delegates had not voted. A two-thirds majority of the constituents was needed for this to occur, but when the votes were counted, the motion had been defeated, 300 to 159.

Subsequently, a straw ballot considering Gary Patterson's name was taken with the intention of giving the nominating committee an idea of how the constituents were thinking. The committee was given only fifteen minutes to decide on the current president. Once again, the results of both the straw ballot and the nominating committee were close. Elder Patterson was slightly favored by the delegates, 253 to 236, but when the members of the committee voted on his name, they rejected him, 12 to 11.

The nominating committee was sent out to decide on a name a third time, and at 11:30 p.m. they joined the group with the results of the work. The name of Joel Tuck was brought to the floor and voted on. Tuck is presently the President of the Southern Union but has had position for only two years.

Despite this fact, he received a large majority of the votes, 154.

The time was now 11:30, still the constituents had voted for an executive secretary or a treasurer. Because of late hour, a motion was made that the meeting be recessed to a later date and was passed. The date agreed upon was 12.

Still, many questions can be answered concerning Georgia-Cumberland presidency. With Elder Tuck's re-election, the Southern Union, would he now take a back to the conference? And would he come with the two years of service at this sent position? At the time, writing it is not known. Tuck has responded. Should he refuse to come, another matter will be brought up at the May 12 meeting.

S.A.F.E. Wants You

Cindy Secret

The cries of Africa's starving millions resound in the air, and once again someone raises to hold a cup of water to parched, dying lips. One of the hands holding the cup at this time, sharing the gift of life, is our own Southern College.

The flame of inspiration for S.A.F.E. (Students Against Famine in Ethiopia) came by letter from Benti Mathews and David Steenberg of Dartmouth College. Southern's Student Association and Collegiate Missions Club were quick to respond. Headed by Cindy Secret and assisted by John Dussinger, Ed Santas, Sharon Dyke, and others, the project is underway.

PDA In Fenton Forest

Gordon Bierch

Once upon a time in Fenton Forest there was some discussion of forest behavior relative to Public Display of Affection. Forest inhabitants were getting too friendly in public to the embarrassment of many members of the forest community. A general meeting was held of everyone and they discussed this problem. Wise Old Owl called the meeting to order and sought to develop a consensus as to what was appropriate public behavior between boys and girls and what was not appropriate.

Eventually there was general agreement among most that some restraint needed to be used for what went on in public. It was agreed that some behavior between two Fenton Forest friends should be only between them and should be kept private.

Most everyone agreed except Freddy Fox and Sammy Skunk. They thought it was not anyone else's business what they did or did not do in public and they left the meeting in a huff. And, of course, anytime that Sammy Skunk left a meeting in a huff everyone knew it. (It might be more appropriately put that he left the meeting in a puff.)

Those who remained all indicated that they would seek to live by this new consensus and they all left the meeting in good spirits. Everything went well for a time. But neither Freddy the Fox or Sammy the Skunk would cooperate.

Freddy, who had been one of the worst offenders, did try at first to be more careful. He and his girlfriend tried to be more careful and no one was embarrassed by this behavior for a number of months.

But Sammy was so upset at the community intrusion into what he considered was his private behavior that he made a big stink about it. And when Sammy and Petunia (Petunia was his girlfriend's name) decided to make a big stink they really could do it. They paid no attention to the sensibilities of other members in the Fenton Forest and in fact there were some who thought that they went out of their way to offend others.

It became so repulsive to the forest family, and especially to visitors who did not live in the forest, that no longer did the issue concern general behavior of forest inhabitants but the issue was now Sammy and Petunia themselves.

Wise Old Owl found it necessary to call another meeting to discuss Sammy and Petunia's behavior. Well Sammy and Petunia boycotted the meeting. Most of the other folks were just as glad for they didn't think that they could have stood to be around the two of them when they were in one of those moods.

In the meeting they discussed at length what to do about Sammy's behavior. Many ideas were suggested. Graf, the bear, said, "Just give me permission and I will take care of it." But he said it in such a way that the other animals thought he might do harm to Petunia and most of them thought that that was a bit drastic.

Lightfoot, the deer, had the idea to shame Sammy and Petunia into stopping their inappropriate behavior. He said, "Every time that Sammy and Petunia are observed in some public behavior that does not show good judgement lets all gather around and watch."

"Do you have any idea" replied Randy Rabbit, "how far away you have to be from Sammy when he is angry?"

Everyone agreed that, though it sounded like a good idea, in this case it would not work, for Sammy and Petunia just had no shame and when he got angry...well!

Other ideas were discussed, but aside from jail and communication from the forest, most of the ideas were either not enforceable, or they just were too severe to fit the crime. It became apparent in the discussion that there were some things in social behavior that were just assumed by most well bred folks and it was hard to convince some like Sammy and Petunia that there were some things that were just not in good taste.

Finally Wise Old Owl summed up their discussion. He said, "You simply have to remember, some residents of our community are just a bunch of animals."

Inflation Rises 0.5 Percent

The increase in gasoline prices has caused the inflation rate to go up 0.5 percent in the last month, the government reported Tuesday. Analysts say that the main cause of the rise is due to higher gasoline prices, which incidentally had been dropping for the previous three months. In contrast, food prices remained constant for the first time since last May. The news, however, is good news to the Reagan administration because the government has been successful at keeping consumer prices moderately low for four straight years.

Sweeter Coca-Cola

In its soft-drink war against Pepsi, the Coca-Cola Co. announced that its popular soda has been sweetened, first in the 99-year history of the drink. The move is a result of losing around to its archival Pepsi, and the latter is crowing that Coke "is not the real thing" anymore. Tuesday's announcement also included the kick-off of a 27-commercial advertising blitz featuring Bill Cosby touting the changed Coke.

Reagan Pressured to Cancel Cemetery Visit

American Jewish leaders are pressuring President Reagan to cancel his controversial visit to a German cemetery for war veterans. Reagan is being asked to drop his visit to the Bitburg cemetery, where at least 47 Nazi Waffen SS troops are buried. Instead Jewish leaders are urging him to hold a ceremony honoring the late Konrad Adenauer who "embodied the spirit of reconciliation." Despite the controversy, Reagan has still stood firm in his decision.

Pornography Called Evil

A study, funded by a conservative foundation, has suggested that pornography is addictive and can cause sexual deviance in those using it for "harmless enjoyment." The Free Congress Research and Education Foundation also noted that a faithful marriage can fight pornography. However, Barry Lynn, legislative director for the American Civil Liberties Union, has said that the study shows nothing new, citing that pornography comes in good and bad forms but is protected by the First Amendment. He also said that the study's results are ridiculous in implying that pornography enhances crime.
Abortion: dejure or defacto?

Jack Blanco

In 1973 the Supreme Court ruled, in the case of Roe vs. Wade, that during the first trimester of pregnancy, a woman has the right to decide to have an abortion. This landmark decision by the Supreme Court, some people thought that the abortion issue had been settled once and for all. But to the contrary, people have continued to debate the issue and to publicly demonstrate their convictions.

The decision by the Supreme Court, rather than settling the issue, has created one of the most heated questions to junior law students. For instance, under the guidance of a physician, the mother has a right to choose to have an abortion during the first trimester, but during the second trimester, the state has a right for health reasons, to overrule her decision, and by the third trimester the fetus is given its constitutional rights. However, in spite of these pronouncements, the anti-abortionists have continued to argue for the “right to life” while the advocates of the “right to choose” have continued to support the Supreme Court’s decision.

In brief, some of the pro-life arguments are the following:

1. A fetus as a human being cannot be equated with a woman.
2. Under the Constitution, women cannot be denied their right of freedom.
3. Moral issues are personal and religious and therefore cannot be controlled by law.

The pro-life forces argue in the following manner:

1. From the moment of conception, a fetus is a potential and developing human.
2. Willfully taking the life of a fetus constitutes murder.
3. To remove a human being from society, moral superiority can be claimed by law whether such morality is considered religious or not. (See Simmons, Birth and Death, Bioethical Decision-making, pp. 74-77.)

The above arguments are predicated on such basic human values and universal truths which are recognized as justifiable by the well-being of the individual and the free functioning of society. It is the disproportionate emphasis of one or of the other of these “universals” that creates an ethical dilemma, a conflict between two undeniable rights in which prioritizing one will cause the disfunctioning of the other. And it is this dilemma which, to some extent, is polarizing the nation.

In a recent CBS documentary, the effect abortion has had in polarizing people was highlighted by showing how explosive the issue has become and the effect it is having on the life and politics of the nation. The documentary concluded by saying that the abortion issue will never be solved by the courts as long as people continue to vote with their hearts.

The abortion issue is still very much alive as was seen in the recent move by the anti-abortion forces. These men and women filed with the Congress the “Unborn Children’s Civil Rights Act of 1983.” Sponsored by Senators Helms, Humphrey, and East, this Civil Rights Act bans the use of funds, appropriated by Congress, to take the life of an unborn child. It also forbids federally-assisted institutions from requiring their students or employees to participate in health insurance programs which sanction abortion or provide counseling or referral for such procedures.

With all the above information, the background is now set for a question. In such a tense atmosphere, are the Seventy Day Activists standing on this issue? In other words, What does our church say about it? What is our “official” position on abortion?

A few years ago the General Conference did appoint an ad hoc committee to study a number of critical issues, one of which was abortion. This committee concluded that because of our biblical and theological presuppositions, Adventists generally hold the position, except in cases involving rape, incest, or the health and survival of the mother, in which case they would allow for abortion. But whatever the conclusions were never voted on by the General Conference. And whether or not our church should even take an official position on abortion raises another question. Would such a decision be helpful and what would it do? Let’s attempt to answer this question by considering some case studies.

Case 1: Fifteen-year-old Ann is about twenty weeks pregnant and appears one morning at the nurse midwife’s Teen Clinic. She is exposed to meconium about a week ago. This exposure was followed by a rash on her back about five days later or about two days ago. A rebula tender indicates no prior immunity. She is told to come back a week later, and this time the tender is slightly elevated though not definitive of the disease being actually present. The physician studies the case and urges the nurse to secure the consent of the parents for an abortion because in his estimation the girl is too young to have an abortion and secondly the fetus could be harmed.

The abortion issue is still very much alive.

Case 2: Mrs. J. is thirty-five years old and decides to see her obstetrician to discuss her unwanted pregnancy, which at the age could be quite serious. The amniocentesis shows the fetus is deformed and will not likely be born with Down Syndrome, a form of mental retardation. Mrs. J., has been devastated. She has two children and now that the last one is in school, she was looking forward to picking up and planning her professional career. Mrs. J., reads the physician’s report, she becomes first tear and then angry. Finally, she can’t control herself any longer and explodes, saying that with her husband does not believe in abortion, she does. She wants to discuss the matter further and only wants to know how quickly she can have it done.

Case 3: Mrs R. has six children and is expecting a seventh. She has had all her others she can possibly handle. So she secretly considers having an abortion before her husband, who is against abortion, finds out. Her sister is also married, strongly urges her to have the abortion. Her older married sister urges her also to go through with it. After a severe struggle, Mrs. R. decides to take the advice of her second sister. She has a successful pregnancy and gives birth to a healthy son who later becomes a nationally-known conductor of a philharmonic orchestra.

Case 4. J.A. was fifteen. She becomes pregnant and immediately confides in her parents. Together they decide that J.A. would not have an abortion. As the weeks and months slip by, the young mother and her parents bond to that little "someone in there," and with the help of the family physician, J.A. has both a successful pregnancy and delivery. Her parents then teach her how to be a caring parent, and in spite of the hardships of single parenthood, J.A. becomes a fine little mother. (Adapted from Ethics in Nursing, by Joyce Beebe Thompson and Lectures in Bioethics by Dr. Jack Provancha, Loma Linda U.)

From these and similar cases, it is obvious that the abortion issue is not so simple to solve. Also, there are numerous other aspects of the abortion issue which impinge on society at large in addition to those effecting the immediate family. If for instance, the abortion issue would be brought to the floor at the General Conference in New Orleans this summer, it would not be any easier to solve there than it has been by the federal government. The issue would be just as heated within the church as it is in outside of the Adventist church.

Adventist are general ly pro-life...

Personally, I am in agreement with the statement made by the General Conference ad hoc committee. Adventists are generally pro-life and therefore against abortion except in cases such as incest, rape, and the survival of the mother. However, more importantly, I believe that we ought not to demand official statements by the General Conference if we can possibly do without them. We need to learn to function as a free people bound together by that unity which springs from the heart and the spirit of free men, from a choice freely made to commit ourselves to a prophetic mission, and from adherence to the principle that all men must remain free to be answerable to God.

(Dr. Jack Blanco is a professor of religion and teaches Christian Ethics on the Southern College campus.)

Southern College Students Have Mixed Views on Abortion

A few years back, the survey below was distributed throughout the United States by the magazine Life. In an effort to gauge the feelings of Southern College students on the subject of abortion, the same survey was used.

However, not all SC students were questioned. Residents of Talge Hall and Thatcher Hall received the survey in their mailboxes. Students who live in the village and have a mailbox in the Student Center also received it. Those who did not fit any of the above descriptions, were not asked their opinions.

Of approximately 1200 students on this campus and its surrounding communities, only 203 returned the survey. Of this group, 97 were males and 106 females. 36 percent were freshmen, 19 percent were sophomores, 19 percent were juniors, and 25 percent were seniors. Only 9 of the participants were married.

Some of the highlights of the survey are the following. Approximately 49 percent of those surveyed believe that having an abortion is morally wrong; however, 59 percent believe that any woman who wants an abortion should be allowed to receive one legally.

To a large majority of the polled group, abortion is an issue that they either feel very strongly or somewhat strongly. About 82 percent have strong feelings towards abortion.

In analyzing this survey, one should keep in mind that it is not meant to reflect society in general nor Adventists beyond this campus. The results also do not reflect the feelings of administrators, professors, other staff members, or Collegedale residents. This survey reflects only a small sample of the Southern College student body.

Frankie Say: No More!!

J. Randolph Thomas

The fun is over. School is out, but the memories still linger. Covering the sports scene at Southern College for the second year in a row is now a thing of the past.

Some say that sports are not all that big of a deal, that in reporting it, it should be a piece of cake. Well, this year was definitely a trying year for me.

Covering softball, for instance, was a real challenge. With four games happening in one day, two the next, and ladies’ games also to report on, I surely felt the load. Fortunately, I asked Steve Martin and Jerry Russell to help me. Steve helped me out the most in the beginning because Jerry was an umpire for the majority of the games.

Then came the All-Night Softball Tournament. Frankly, after our team was eliminated, I wanted to go to bed. But, noting my commitment to the paper, I stayed awake. Then I started to get cold. And it got colder. And colder. The cup of hot chocolate were mowing up. Then it began to rain. I knew I was in for a cold then.

Minutes later, to my delight, Jacobs postponed the end of the tourney. “Now,” I said to myself, “I can get some sleep!” This was probably the only time I welcomed rain in Collegeville all year. Two days later, I had a cold. “Sniff.”

How I Hate It to Say: Football! What a fun sport! When could you ever forget Scotty’s team and their game attire? They were certainly a fun bunch to watch. When Scotty passed away during the flag football season, I was deeply saddened. I couldn’t bear to go out and cover his team’s last game; I couldn’t. I’m glad that we now have a sportsmanship award in his name. He was a true athlete, a great guy, and I miss him.

Since thereafter, volleyball got going. I enjoyed covering this sport primarily because it was too cold outside to enjoy anything else. Just watching a good volleyball game was this reporter’s delight. I missed the three-man tourney, however, due to a pressing matter called homework. But that was okay because the basketball season was soon to begin!

I covered all of “AA’s” games and a few “A” league, “B” league, and ladies’ league games. I’ll never forget Teresa Rodgers’ play on the court. She was dynamite! She’d shake the whole team coming down the court, miss a layup, come back down on defense, steal the ball, take it to the hoop, draw the foul, get the basket, and get a three-point play! She’d do that about five times during the game. I loved watching her play!

“AA” was a different story. I really couldn’t get into the teams because I was a member of the AA team. I reported their games objectively, though, even though most of them would have thrown up bricks for the whole season.

Rees Series time. I didn’t report on it because three weeks separated the end of the tournament and the next. Aceon. Needless to say, in three weeks everybody knew who did what. So why report it?

But for those who missed it, the sophomores came out on top, led by tournament MVP Ken Warren and all—tournament teammate David Green. The sophomores beat the freshmen convincingly after the freshmen upset the juniors on Thursday night. The seniors, top seed in the tournament, also fell victim to the upset atmosphere that night as the champion sophomores stuck it to them in good fashion. The Rees Series was the highlight of SC’s basketball season.

After spring break though, it was time for hat tricks, glove saves, and poke-checks. Yes, horse hockey time! Rob Mellor’s team, with Ryan Lunnsberry, John Montstech, Vito Montaperto, and company mowed down the league in a perfect season. They won the best hockey game as SC this year, a 6-5 victory over Dale Lacca’s team. Who scored the winning goal? I don’t really remember. (Just kidding, Lunnsberry).

To wind up the year, thank God, the soccer season took center stage. Did any one team do well? Not many, except for the players, of course. Barry Krall’s team dominated play this season with William McKnight’s team not far behind. Please, don’t everybody clap at once.

Winding it down, after a long school year, that seemed to go by so fast (with no regrets, thank you), I’d like to hear those sweet, sweet words that my good buddy Ronald Reagan once said in my favorite album... “Frankly: say no more!” Amen.

Thanks Steve and Jerry for all the help you’ve given me. Good luck next year!

Golf Tournament Held at Nob North

Jerry Russell

The spring golf tournament this year was sponsored by the gymnastics team and was played at Nob North Golf Course. The tournament was open to both students and non-students. Sixteen teams, made up of four individuals each, were divided into three flights according to ability.

In the championship flight, Mike McClung, senior religion major, and three former students of SC, shot a remarkable 15-under-par with three eagles to take first place by two strokes over the team of Matt Naffke, John Naffke, Steve Jacobs, and Ted Evans.

In the first flight, College Dale Post Office manager Dick Mokowski, Ken Pedein, Daryl Detrich, and Steve Cramer fired an 11-under-par for first place over Bruce and Dick Stumpfke, Bob Mills, and Lloyd Lawing, who combined for a nine-under-par.

In the second flight, Men’s Bears Qually and Christman, Bob Lang, senior theology major, and Bob Rodgers, sophomore chemistry major, shot a six-under-par, three better than the team of Doug Mallin, Royee Earp, Tim Beaulieu, and John O’Brien, all alumni of SC to win that division.

Trophies were given to the winners, and sleeves of golf balls were given to the individuals with the longest drive and the longest closest to the pin.
Thanks to Competition, Campuses Plan Some Dorm Treats For the Fall

College Press Service

For college students, access to cable television, automated banking machines and an occasional lobster dinner or late night pizza used to mean having to go off campus.

Not anymore.

Thanks to administrators’ worries about attracting students to their dorms and intensifying competition for rents with off-campus apartment complexes, an increasing number of schools are offering a smorgasbord of once-unheard-of amenities for next fall.

At the University of North Dakota, some dorms have weight rooms and saunas. At Eastern Michigan University, some on-campus residents have access to computer rooms in their dormitories, and are offered 12-month leases.

At the University of Oklahoma, free cable television in dormitory lounges, a pizza bar and an automated banking machine are in the works for next fall.

The school also has hired a new food service director and given free reign to plans what administrators call “monotony breakers,” such as lobster dinners.

“While we might, there are some areas in which we just cannot compete with apartment complex owners,” says OU assistant housing director Craig Pulliam.

“But there is an awful lot we can do.”

Dormitory residents are not pampered at every school. Many institutions still face perennial dormitory overcrowding, particularly at the beginning of the school year.

“It’s sporadic across the country,” says Jim Grimm, housing director at the University of Florida and president of a national housing officers group.

Grimm estimates that between 20 and 25 percent of the nation’s colleges now have a hard time filling their dorms. Some schools, Oklahoma and the Superior and Oshkosh campuses of the University of Wisconsin among them, are being forced to close dormitories.

But the schools still have to pay off mortgages on closed dorms, so, to avoid similar fates, most vacant dorms are turning increasingly to more aggressive marketing.

And some schools that are still full are offering students more to stay on campus, if only to keep their dorms as attractive as those on other campuses.

Grimm notes the University of Florida is establishing dormitories with a strong academic thrust: computers, quiet halls and live-in faculty advisors.

In some cases, innovative university administrators are acting on their own initiative. In others, they have no choice. Norman, for example, has developed a massive apartment glut off campus, Pulliam points out.

Landlords are offering a range of inducements to attract students, including a month’s free rent.

Other forces worked to undermine the university’s housing program. When the state’s minimum legal drinking age rose to 21 last year, the school was forced to issue citations for underage drinking in the dorms.

We don’t have the luxury of saying we’re not going to enforce state law,” Pulliam says.

The number of OU students living on campus reached an all-time high in 1982-83. Dormitory enrollment has declined by about 10 percent since then, and school officials expect it to go down again next year.
