Enrollment Hits New High

SMC Restarts Farm

Southern Missionary College's Grounds Department, under the direction of Charles Lacey, began this summer an experimental farm to supplement the college cafeteria's supply of food and to fight the inflationary trends in food prices.

Twenty-five acres were lent to the project by the McKee Baking Company in Collegedale. From this land, 14 different vegetables have already been harvested and five soon will be.

Among the products grown are onions, tomatoes, cabbage, cucumbers, peppers, eggplant, beets, and corn. The largest crop is white potatoes, with over 20,000 pounds already gathered. Another crop will be harvested later.

Some faculty members and students volunteered their help and shared in the produce.

Other activities to increase production and fight inflation include a program of renting garden spots to students for their personal use. Forty-five spots were rented over the summer.

The farm has been quite productive for its purposes. The storage room in the cafeteria is already filled to capacity, and a cave in the Student Park is being filled with the surplus vegetables.

Next year even more acreage will be farmed, but Lacey says that long-range expansion is based on a wait-and-see attitude.

President Frank Knittel of SMC welcomes Aida Caceres of El Salvador as the 1600th student as Dr. Arno Kutzner looks on.

Southern Missionary College, at the end of two days of registration, had enrolled a record high of 1571 students, a gain of 87 students over last year, according to Dr. Arno Kutzner, director of admissions and records.

This is the 17th consecutive year SMC has shown an increase in enrollment, rising from 500 students in the 1957-58 academic year.

The enrollment last year at the same time reached 1484 students, to go on to a total of 1555 after 10 days.

Kutzner projected that at least 50 more students will register late, raising the total to well over 1600 students. This estimate was based on figures from previous years.

Dean of students, Kenneth Spears, indicated that all three student dormitories are running over with three to a room and guest rooms and recreation rooms used for the overflow.

The curriculum having the most students is nursing, with 508. Education, both elementary and secondary, has registered 237, theology and religion 179, business administration 117, and pre-medicine 114.

Of the total, 592 are freshmen, 332 sophomores, and 207 juniors. There are 142 two-year seniors and 182 four-year seniors. The rest are either special or post-graduate students.

Distributors New Home

The new building that houses Collegedale Distributors is now open and doing business, according to Charles Fleming, Jr., general manager for industries and enterprises of Southern Missionary College.

Don Glass, manager of Distributors, reports that the SMC subsidiary is now doing over $3 million gross business a year, and that he is grateful to Southern Missionary College's Committee of 100 for arranging the financing of approximately $200,000 for the building without equipment. The furnishing and equipment will be about $75,000. The total cost is $375,000.

The building, which has approximately 24,000 square feet plus 30,000 cubic feet for the cold storage room, is located just across the freeway from the Ooltewah Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Clouse Visits Campus

Elder Gilbert Goodwin, pastor of the Jasper church, brought Mr. Clouse to SMC for a visit.

John Grover Clouse arrived February 11, 1884, in Graysville, Tennessee, a little town nestled against the Cumberland Mountains. He was the second of seven children, four boys and three girls. The J. W. Clouse family belonged to the Presbyterian Church and the father operated a general store and was also justice of the peace.

In the fall of 1892, when Professor and Mrs. Colcord came to the Southland to pioneer the educational work in Graysville, he met the Clouse family and arranged to have the use of the room above the Clouse store for a classroom. John Clouse was then eight years old and says he distinctly remembers sitting in the living room by the fireplace when Professor Colcord asked his father for the use of the room.

Professor Colcord built an outside staircase and also made benches for the pupils. When school started in February there were 23 pupils and John Clouse was one of them.

After several years in which the school grew and prospered, religious persecution arose and John Clouse's father, as justice of the peace, was called on to referee complaints about work done on Sunday by the Seventh-day Adventists. His position was that they had as much right to work on Sunday as the railroad had to run trains through Graysville on Sundays.

Mr. Clouse, a sprightly ninety-year-old gentleman, enjoyed his first visit to the SMC campus, March 27. It was interesting to all to see and visit with probably the only living student who went to school in Graysville when the school that grew to be SMC, first opened its doors.

Mr. Clouse lives in Jasper, Tennessee, with his daughter where he has lived since 1949. He followed in his father's footsteps and was a justice of the peace, which office he held for three, six-year terms. He said that he pronounced judgments only on the evidence produced and never let politics, religion or social standing enter into his decisions. He spent some of his life farming and selling insurance.

Mr. Clouse's sense of humor showed when he chuckled while telling about an old-timer in Graysville who ran an ad in the paper that she had a good set of false teeth for sale.

Those Who Walked These Halls

1938

Charles Aebersold, Ed.D., recently made an extended trip to Switzerland where he still has relatives. Switzerland has a strong attraction for him as both of his parents were born there. He became a Swiss citizen three years ago without giving up his American citizenship. He writes: "The Alpine areas were in full beauty of snow-capped mountains, green lush valleys, and blossoms by the millions. Some of the scenery near SMC has a likeness to the peaceful valleys, towns and rural areas of Switzerland."

1949

Elder Manuel M. Carballal is treasurer and director of Administrative Services in the General Conference Insurance Service. Mrs. Carballal works at the Inter-American Development Bank in Washington. Their two daughters are both married. One lives near them in Maryland and the other is in Puerto Rico.
